Married Men Face Draft This Year, Hershey Says

Certain by Christmas, Selection Chief Adds; War Workers Also Will Be Reclassified

Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service director, said yesterday that married men now classed in 3-A face a draft summons by Christmas and that draft-age men in war industries soon would be called to service even though replacements have not been trained.

"The drafting of married men may take place in late October or early November, certainly by Christmas," he asserted. "Even one-armed or one-legged men will have to run machines, if necessary, as we fill out the Army with able-bodied men now in plants. Draft boards now are sorting 3-A men to get 1-A men to fill quotas, and the boards are pretty near the end of the rope," he stated.

Few Are Irreplaceable

"I can't talk too tough about the necessity of getting men in 2-A and 2-B replaced," he told the National Institute for Commercial and Trade Organization Executives at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.

"We have learned there are very few irreplaceable men, and in industry, agriculture and in Government we have got to train people to replace draft-age men, and we have got to do it quickly.

"In the past, Selective Service has protected vital industries, such as aircraft and ship-producers, against loss of manpower, but from here on, when the Army needs the man, there will be no waiting until he is replaced."

The office of Man Power Commissioner Paul V. McNutt, whose aim is to keep necessary men out of the Army, said he was out of town and there would be no comment on Hershey's statements until he returned.

"Industry," said Hershey, "must replace so-called vital men otherwise eligible for the draft with women and older men."

At "Superhuman" Rate

He asserted that the Selective Service system needs men "at a rate which would have been considered superhuman a year ago" and "the number of able-bodied men in industry must be drastically reduced in the very near future."

"We will run out of single men in a few months," the director said in an interview, adding: "Men with secondary dependents or a wife only will be taken first. If I were a man with a wife only, I would make arrangements to enter the Army now. We will have to change our conception of what is considered support. The wife would certainly not live in luxury."

General Hershey reaffirmed the order in which 3-A men will be drafted:

1. Single men with secondary dependents, such as aged or crippled relatives.
2. Married men whose wives are employed.
3. Men with dependent wives only.
4. Men with dependent wives and children.

"Victory Through Air Power"

The Gallup Poll in Friday's Post revealed that 40% of the people believe that Germany can be defeated through the air alone. Do you think it's possible? Major Alexander P. de Seversky does, and he is one of America's most famous authorities on aviation. He explains his views in his best-selling book, "Victory Through Air Power," now running in The Sunday Post. If you are not already reading this authoritative, informative book, start with tomorrow's installment in The Post.

Revamped Navy General Board Devoid of Flying Officers

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Navy last week announced a "wartime reorganization" of its general board, designed to strengthen that ranking advisory body for what was described as its greatly increased duties and responsibilities.

Two ranking admirals, both recognized as outstanding strategists and naval leaders, were added to the group. It was given a new chairman.

The action gave the general board a membership of seven to carry on its important work of recommending to the Secretary of the Navy the "number, type and design of vessels and aircraft" required to fight the war.

Observers who took the trouble to pore over the records of the seven members of Navy's top policy recommending board noted one striking thing: Not one of them was an airman.

None Has Air Experience

Every member of the group has had a brilliant career in the naval service, but none has had any real experience in aviation.

The Washington Post recently pointed out what seemed to be a definite lack of air-mindedness on the part of the Navy high command. It called attention to the fact that though the naval air arm was doing the bulk of the fighting at sea, virtually all of the top Navy jobs were filled by nonflying officers.

In contrast to the Army, where policy requires that half of the members of the War Department general staff be aviators, less than one-eighth of the staff of the fleet commander-in-chief are airmen. Although Admiral Ernest J. King, No. 1 ranking naval officer, is a qualified pilot, very few of the other full admirals and vice admirals in key commands afloat and ashore have been picked from naval aviation.

Its Roster

The revamped general board has even less air representation. Here are its members:

Admiral Arthur J. Hepburn, retired, chairman, former commander in chief of the United States Fleet and until recently Navy public relations director. He had charge of subchaser and aircraft operations—though not a pilot—on the southern coast of Ireland during the last war, but except as commander of a fleet or force which included air units, has held no air posts since.

Admiral Thomas C. Hart, retired, former commander of the United States Asiatic Fleet, and one-time chairman of the Navy General Board. A submarine expert.

Board Named To Study Fuel Oil Rationing

Step Believed Certain For East but Extent Must Be Decided

The question of rationing of fuel oil in the homes of East Coast residents this winter was turned over to a three-man committee last night by War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson.

Nelson named War Undersecretary Robert P. Patterson, Petroleum Coordinator Harold L. Ickes and Price Administrator Leon Henderson to tackle the problem as the Government moved on a broad front to lick the unbalanced scarcity of gasoline, fuel oil and other petroleum products.

Among the steps taken were:

1. Banning of transportation of automotive fuel by rail in 20 Midwestern and Southwestern States.
2. Approval by the petroleum coordinator's office of an interim plan for the emergency movement by Great Lakes tankers and barges of 15,000 barrels daily of essential oil products to the Atlantic seaboard.
3. Approval of plans for extension of the "Plantation" pipeline, from Greensboro, N. C., to the Richmond, Va., area, in a move designed to bring another 30,000 barrels of oil products daily to Eastern consuming centers.
4. Renewal of campaign to stimulate conversion of oil burners to the use of coal, and,
5. The certification of a September production rate of 4,068,000 barrels.

New Cut Ordered In Use of Coffee

By the Associated Press

The War Production Board yesterday ordered a further 10 per cent reduction in the amount of coffee available to American consumers, effective September 1.

Civilian coffee consumption under the order will be held to about 110 million pounds a month, compared with normal unrestricted consumption of about 147 million pounds.

Philadelphia Pastor Guilty In Spy Plot

3 Coconspirators Sentenced; Kunze Gets 15-Year Term

By the Associated Press

Hartford, Conn., Aug. 21.—The Rev. Kurt E. B. Molzahn, pastor of an historic German Lutheran Church in Philadelphia, was convicted today of conspiracy to betray the country in which he has lived for 18 years, by delivering United States military secrets to Axis powers.

The Federal Court jury of eight men and four women who had heard the four-week long trial deliberated for two hours.

Prosecutor Thomas J. Dodd, jr., asked that the full penalty of the peacetime espionage act—20 years in prison—be invoked immediately, but Judge J. Joseph Smith continued the case until Tuesday morning to give the defense opportunity to prepare arguments on motions.

Dr. Ebell Gets Seven Years

He then immediately sentenced three of Pastor Molzahn's coconspirators, including Gerhard Wilhelm Kunze, former national leader of the German-American Bund, who had pleaded guilty to the indictment. Kunze, who now calls himself a German citizen, though he is the only native born among five conspirators, was sent to prison for 15 years as Dodd recommended.

The prosecution's recommendation also was followed in the sentence of Dr. Wolfgang Ebell, 43, El Paso (Tex.) physician, who was given a seven-year term. Dr. Otto Willumeit, 37, stocky Chicago bund leader, must serve five years. Dodd had asked that he be "leniently dealt with."

The fifth conspirator, Anatase A. Vonsiatsky, Russian Fascist leader, was sentenced before the Molzahn trial started July 28 and is serving five years.

The $25,000 bail put up for Molzahn by his parishioners at Old Zion's Church was revoked, and the

Henderson Fears Food Prices May Rise 30% for Year

Leon Henderson, chief of the Office of Price Administration, yesterday issued a dour warning to the housewives of the country that a "dangerous pattern" is being drawn by the continued advance in food prices over which the OPA has no control. He said that the advances recorded from mid-June to mid-July, if projected over a year's time, would amount to a 30 per cent increase in costs of those items in the food budget over which controls are not operative.

"The effect of increases of this magnitude on the average family budget," said Henderson, "would be most destructive. Inflation would have a large foot in the kitchen, even if OPA continued to succeed to hold in line the prices it has set for the things it is empowered to control."

He added that fears of a continued rise were "by no means fanciful."

The Henderson warning was in consonance with his important speech Thursday night at Norfolk in which he said that the farmer would have to take less for his products, that labor would have to accept stabilization of wages and that there must be further cuts in corporate profits in order to combat inflation.

In the meantime, President Roosevelt told his press conference that fairly good progress was being made on a study of inflation controls, which Justice Samuel I. Rosenman of New York is making in order to formulate a comprehensive program. He has talked with 40 or 50 people about it, said the President, in addition to Justice Rosenman and expects to have something to say about it within a

700 Japs Land in Solomons, Marines Kill 670, Capture 30; Foe's Gilberts Base Wrecked

By the United Press

Honolulu, Aug. 21.—Admiral Chester W. Nimitz announced today in a communique that United States Marines with Maj. James Roosevelt second in command successfully landed August 17 on Makin Island in the Gilbert group and retired after wrecking an enemy seaplane base and other installations.

The communique said that at least 80 Japanese were killed by the landing force, and radio installations and stores were destroyed.

One small seaplane was destroyed on the water.

Japanese aircraft from other bases attempting to assist the garrison on Makin inflicted losses upon their own forces in the confusion surrounding the American attack, Nimitz announced.

The American force suffered "moderate losses."

The guns of United States ships sank a small transport and a gunboat, it was announced.

The United States forces withdrew after accomplishing their mission, the communique said.

(The Japanese earlier had issued a communique saying they had "repulsed" an American attempt to land.)

It was the second time since the Japanese occupied Makin Island December 7—Pearl Harbor Day—that Americans had visited their fury on it. Last January 31 a naval task force under Vice Admiral William F. Halsey, jr., struck at Makin as part of a sweep against the Gilbert and Marshall Islands which cost the Japanese 16 ships and 41 planes. Two enemy patrol planes were destroyed and an auxiliary vessel badly damaged at Makin during that raid.

The communique, No. 7 of the war for the Pacific fleet, read:

"A force of Marines of the United States Pacific fleet made a successful landing on Japanese-held Makin Island August 17. The purpose of the expedition was to destroy installations of this enemy seaplane base.

"This purpose was accomplished in entirety and the force has been withdrawn.

"The known enemy losses inflicted by the Marines are:

"At least 80 Japanese were killed, radio stores and installations destroyed, one large and one small seaplane destroyed on the water.

"Other losses were inflicted on the enemy forces by heavy bombing attacks by their own aircraft from

Axis Will Pay For Atrocities, President Vows

Allies Will Try Leaders for Crimes, Roosevelt Declares

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt solemnly warned Axis terrorists yesterday that their "barbaric crimes" against civilian populations in Europe and Asia were being recorded in Washington, and that they would be punished for their brutality after the war.

"The United Nations are going to win this war," the President said in a formal statement. "When victory has been achieved, it is the purpose of the Government of the United States, as I know it is the purpose of each of the United Nations, to make appropriate use of the information and evidence in respect to these barbaric crimes of the invaders, in Europe and in Asia.

"It seems only fair that they should have this warning that the time will come when they shall have to stand in courts of law in the very countries which they are now oppressing and answer for their acts."

The President, looking up from his prepared statement, told newspapermen that he hoped retribution would come through organized courts and not through attacks by individuals. He had heard, he said,

Few But Tough

Rangers Tell Their Own Story of Raid

By Drew Middleton
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 21.—The commando raid on Dieppe "looked like a suicide mission" to four American Rangers attached to Lord Lovat's command, but, as Corpl. William R. Brady of Grand Forks, N. Dak., put it today:

"Damned if we didn't make it."

Brady and his companions deemed it suicide when they were ordered to storm a 75-foot cliff north of Dieppe. The others are Staff Sergt. Kenneth Stemson of Russell, Minn.; Sergt. Alex J. Szima of Dayton, Ohio, and Corpl. Franklin M. Koons of Swea City, Iowa.

They came back from the death-ridden gunpits around Dieppe with undoubted admiration for British fighting qualities, and they praised the Canadians as "one hell of a fine bunch."

Brady was in the first group to land on the beach. It scaled a cliff to knock out two German pillboxes.

"I was the last man over and found the first pillbox empty," he said.

What's a Little War Compared to Cabbages?

London, Aug. 21.—Bullets were keening, death droned in the sky, and men were falling around Dieppe.

But all that meant little to one Frenchwoman. Four Rangers passed through her village and one crossed her yard. Out she came and a storm of words and gestures beat upon the Ranger, Sergt. Alex Szima.

Pro-Nazi? No, but the Ranger had trampled her vegetable garden.

Stalingrad Battle Roars Toward Crisis

Foe Hurls In Fresh Troops as Reds Give Ground Slowly

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Saturday), Aug. 22.—The Nazi bid for Stalingrad reached a critical stage early today with reinforced German troops trying to obtain bridgeheads on the eastern bank of the Don 40 miles above that Volga city and attempting to exploit a wedge driven into Russian positions northeast of Kotelnikovski below the Don.

The midnight communique said the Red army had repelled constant German attacks southeast of Kletskaya on the Don bend, but acknowledged that Nazi tanks had breached Russian positions southwest of Stalingrad in the Kotelnikovski area.

"Northeast of Kotelnikovski repeated heavy attacks by tanks and mechanized infantry were repelled," the communique said. "In another sector the enemy sent 100 tanks into the attack. Only a few succeeded in breaking through.

"The infantry which followed the tanks was cut off by Soviet troops. Its annihilation now is proceeding."

The next 24 hours should tell much in the grim fight for Stalingrad. Twice in two days the Germans have thrown forces across to the eastern bank of the Don loop, but the Russians said most of these shock troops were wiped out.

Russian observers admit, however, that it is going to be hard to hold the Germans, especially if the Nazis realize a superiority of numbers and equipment as they have now for two months.

The banks of the Don River loop were reported strewn with dead German shock troops in a bloody

Foe Slips Ashore From Speedboats At Night; Yanks Lose 28 Slain

By the Associated Press

Pearl Harbor, T. H., Aug. 21. Admiral Chester W. Nimitz revealed in a communique today that 700 Japanese tried to land in the Solomon Islands on Thursday but that United States Marines killed 670 of them and took the remainder prisoner.

The Japanese landed Thursday from fast boats, the communique said. The Marines, it added, lost 28 killed and 72 were wounded.

The communique said that since they made their initial landings, the marines have been consolidating their positions daily.

Skirmishes occurred, the communique said, with the Japanese, who have retired to the mountains and jungles. In these brushes both sides suffered casualties.

Nimitz's Account

The text of the communique:

"Since the initial successful landings in the Solomon Islands by U. S. forces under the command of Vice Admiral (Robert Lee) Ghormley a period of mopping up in order to consolidate our positions has been in progress.

"The Japanese defenders took to the hills and jungle to escape our forces. There have been daily skirmishes between U. S. Marine patrols and enemy detachments.

"In these actions, both sides suffered casualties.

"On August 19, the Marines, with a loss of 6 killed and 13 wounded, wiped out a Japanese detachment of 92 officers and men. Enemy resistance continued until the last man was killed.

"On the night of August 20 the enemy landed a force of about 700 well-equipped troops from high-speed boats outside the Marines' lines and attempted to break through.

"During the darkness only hand-to-hand fighting was possible, but with the breaking of day the Marines were able to maneuver. While one battalion held the front line another battalion moved to the flank and drove the then withdrawing Japanese to the beach.

"The action continued until late afternoon.

"Of 700 Japanese, 670 are dead and the rest prisoners. The Marine losses were 28 killed and 72 wounded. The Marines in the Solomons, who are under the command of Maj. Gen. Alexander A. Vandegrift, U. S. M. C., have added another page to history with their outstanding achievement"

Nelson to Tell Plans Today; Some WPB Aides Uneasy

Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board, yesterday scheduled for 11 a. m. today a press conference at which he is expected to reveal how he will apply his newly announced "get tough" policy.

Reports of important pending developments at WPB including possible dismissals of some inefficient officials created considerable ferment at WPB headquarters yesterday.

Fear was expressed in some quarters that Nelson might "get tough" by dismissing more of his critics instead of cracking down on the production program by developing a satisfactory over-all plan to keep production schedules moving. However, close associates of Nelson remained optimistic yesterday, convinced that "the boss" would rise to the occasion and announce constructive action.

Meanwhile, the C. I. O. called for the dismissal of $1-a-year men responsible for materials shortages and asked Nelson to reinstate Frederick I. Libbey, engineering consultant who was dismissed after newspaper stories appeared on a report he was preparing which was critical of the iron and steel branch. It also was reported that a number of labor consultants loaned to the War Production Board by the C. I. O. were considering a mass resignation as a protest against Libbey's dismissal.

One proposal which bears the approval of some top WPB officials calls for the creation of a master production plan which would enable Nelson to "get tough" simultaneously with the military represented by the Army-Navy munitions board and with the civilian economy.

Under the proposed over-all plan, WPB would obtain fairly complete information by three-month periods on the quantity of finished products needed by ANMB, the civilian economy, and our Allies. This data would then be translated into equivalent raw materials with the totals compared with the total raw materials available. Then, WPB would retailor the entire program to fit available materials, lopping off some from the civilian economy here, some from nonessential military there, etc.

This last phase would be the place where Nelson would really have to "get tough." Once the over-all inventory showed where the program had to be cut and by how much, he would have to lay down the law to both the ANMB and the defenders of the civilian economy within WPB

Public Disputes Out

Roosevelt Orders U. S. Agency Heads to Curb Their Talk

Key Government officials yesterday received an order from President Roosevelt to avoid talking too much and to refrain from trying to settle their disputes publicly.

He revealed that he sent identical letters to all Government agency and department heads asking them to attempt to harmonize differences with other officials either by conferences with them or by appealing directly to the Chief Executive.

"Disagreements either as to fact or policy should not be publicly aired, but are to be submitted to me by the appropriate heads of the conflicting agencies. The policy of the Government should be announced by me as the responsible head thereof," the President wrote his top officials. "Disagreements as to facts can be resolved, if necessary, by investigations and surveys directed by me."

Top officials were told to pass the same word down to their subordinates.

It was recalled that the President gave Judge Samuel I. Roseman the job of gathering information on inflation after a sharp conflict appeared between Price Administrator Leon Henderson and the War Labor Board over wage controls. A similar survey job was given to a three-man committee headed by Bernard Baruch to untangle the present rubber muddle.

Presidential action on too much talk came after Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information, reported to Mr. Roosevelt that Government officials have been making verbal statements dealing with matters touching more than one department or agency "which

Senators Being Recalled to Act on Soldier Vote Bill

Majority Leader Barkley said yesterday that he was calling absent Senators to return to Washington Monday to act on a bill to give servicemen a chance to vote in November.

His announcement followed a conference with Senator Green (Democrat) of Rhode Island, sponsor of the voting bill, and Senator George (Democrat) of Georgia, who blocked passage Thursday by announcing that he would insist a quorum majority of the Senators be present to vote.

Second Front Held Proven Feasible

War Sidelights

Serb Patriots Wreck Train; 21 Are Killed

London, Aug. 21 (AP).—The wrecking of the Zagreb-Belgrade express train, with 21 persons killed and 32 injured was disclosed by Yugoslav sources today in reporting a fresh wave of sabotage.

The German field commandant at Nis offered rewards for arrests of persons who recently cut the Belgrade-Salonika railroad at three points, they said.

[The Italians have slaughtered more than 300 inhabitants of one village, but Yugoslav armies have killed 10,000 Axis troops in bitter battles during the last two months, the Yugoslav government revealed tonight, according to the United Press.

[The town was leveled because patriots had cut the nearby Mostar-Sarajevo railroad.]

Yugoslavs in the Middle East said Croat guerillas also had blocked rail traffic between Zagreb and the Italian border for two weeks.

The Yugoslav report added that Ustachi (pro-Axis Croat) garrisons in several villages near Zagreb had been annihilated by patriots.

Franco Cautions Spaniards

Vigo, Spain, Aug. 20—(Delayed)—(AP).—Generalissimo Francisco Franco declared in an address tonight that Spaniards must be prepared for an industrial, moral and military struggle, although this "does not mean that we want war."

Franco spoke before a special assembly of Galician syndicated workers, making the trip to Vigo by a destroyer.

"Life is a struggle," he said, "and peace is accidental."

Doomed Woman Escapes

Vichy, Aug. 21 (AP).—Paris police announced today that Madeleine Larzin, French woman condemned to death last month as instigator of a food riot, had escaped at Montparnasse Station while being transferred to Rennes Prison.

Another for Guerillas

Moscow, Aug. 21 (AP).—The Red Star reported today that Adolf Beck, German agent for 14,250 acres of Leningrad Province farm lands, had been killed by guerillas.

ing the ground from Nazi .50 caliber guns in another pill box. The party halted beside the first pillbox and, as Grady said:

"What the hell! We thought we'd go get the other one."

They started for it, but then paused while Bill Phinney, a British commando, thoughtfully climbed a telegraph pole through a hail of bullets and cut the wires.

As they neared the pillbox two Spitfires came to their aid. The British planes swooped low and "neutralized" the pillbox with machine-gun bullets.

All this time, the group was under fire from German snipers.

"We let them go ahead—we didn't lose a man," Brady said.

The Garand Shoots Fast

They moved forward then to a crossroads where they encountered a German patrol of ten. The group opened fire, the Americans replied with Garand rifles, and got five.

The others, Brady said, "got the hell out of there."

"I believe I was scared when we had to cross a field 200 yards wide under fire," one of the Americans said.

"But the British were so damned calm about it that it seemed like a maneuver. You can depend on them."

Four of the British were killed and three wounded. None of the Americans attached to Lovat's unit was killed and American casualties on the entire raid were light.

Koons praised the "wonderful job" done by the R. A. F. to cover his party's landing. Under this cover they reached a ravine used by bathers in happier times to get down the cliffside. There they found barbed with a sign in German and English reading "Attention, Mines."

"We figured this was a bluff, so we said 'To hell with it' and went right through after blowing up some wire with a bangalore torpedo," Koons said.

The party moved about 600 yards through good cover to an orchard.

Szima said there was an antiaircraft gun there and "we were about to fire on it."

"Any minute I thought I'd see a German helmet followed by a handful of grenades," he said.

They found a dead German in the orchard with his chest blown away and then got ready to wipe out a German gun crew.

"I saw them getting ready to fire at the Spitfires," Szima said. "I got my rifle ready when a British officer said we'd do it the quick way. So he calls up some Bren gunners and they chopped down the gun crew.

"They started firing back. My hat fell off. I bent over to pick it up and found a bullet hole in it. Then I got a bullet over my shoulder. Another hit the concrete. That guy had me picked as his meat."

Two Germans in a nearby house attacked the party.

Jim Haggarty, a British commando, whom Szima called "the toughest guy I ever saw," blew a German out of the window with a grenade.

All the Americans agreed that the Germans were "plenty tough" and had wonderful field craft.

The boys couldn't say enough in praise of the British. They told how Sergt. Maj. Charlie Williams with a hole blown in his back had directed the company's fire and how another noncommissioned officer lay with a bullet in his stomach, firing until he died.

As they drew off, the Americans gave covering fire with Garands.

"You know what covering fire is," said Koons. "You stand there and hope to God you'll see a German but you don't.

But Neutral Experts Doubt Allies Have Adequate Air Power

By Thomas F. Hawkins
Associated Press Staff Writer

Bern, Switzerland, Aug. 21.—The Allied landing raid at Dieppe demonstrated, according to the opinion expressed by foreign military experts here today, that a second front can be opened in France—given sufficient superiority of land-based planes, adequate transport, and the proper element of surprise.

Granted that a full scale invasion effort would cost heavily, the Allies would have a chance of advancing to the Meuse and Rhine if they outweighed the Germans in men and material.

Neutral observers raised the question whether, in view of the costly air battles over Dieppe Wednesday, Allied air power has yet attained sufficient strength to give the necessary protection to full-scale landings.

Shipping Major Need

The availability of transports for supplies from America to England and for supplies and troops to cross the Channel also appeared to be a major problem.

The Socialist newspaper La Sentinelle noted that "the psychosis of a second front has profoundly penetrated the spirit of the masses in Germany," and added that while propaganda is directed toward belittling its chances, the German high command "is convinced that sooner or later the problem will pose itself in a direct manner."

With this in mind "the Germans have erected in haste bases of defense all along the coasts of occupied regions," the newspaper said.

Along the coasts of France, Belgium and Holland, according to a correspondent of La Sentinelle who visited the zone recently, "even in places most exposed, the German disposition of defenses extends barely more than 5 or 6 kilometers (3 to 4 miles) in depth."

He wrote that in many places protected by the nature of the terrain no artificial defense system had been established.

Lack Trained Troops

In contrast, the correspondent of La Sentinelle wrote, "The Germans have powerfully fortified the Meuse and Rhine, which would tend to prove little confidence in their coastal defense. . . ."

One of the Germans' difficulties is that trained troops are not available for transfer to the coast, he wrote.

He estimated that the troops now in position in France, Belgium and Holland totaled about 30 divisions formed of "three distinct elements—young recruits of 19 to 20 . . . insufficiently prepared and not hardened to war; secondly, elements on leave after suffering particularly heavy losses in hard combats in Russia; and finally, a greater number of the 'grand reserve'" (of an average age of 40 to 45 years).

It appeared here that at Dieppe the Allies hit at one of the toughest spots of German resistance.

[The Moscow radio, heard in London by the United Press, said today that a second front would be opened "soon, very soon," and reported that underground forces in occupied France and Norway were all set to aid the Allied invaders.]

Dive Bombers Might Have Changed Story, Experts Say

By Edward W. Beattie, Jr.
United Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 21.—German air defenses proved startlingly inept in the Battle of Dieppe and if the Allies had followed through with dive-bombers and parachute troops behind their perfect fighter screen they might have turned the moderate success of their invasion rehearsal into a smashing victory, Allied observers said tonight.

The latest analysis showed that it was the flanking fire of German strong points which mowed down the Allies as they stepped ashore and robbed the raid of much of its impetus, these sources said.

They believed that dive-bombers could have been turned against the concrete and sand-bagged fortifications in the wake of the initial fighter assaults and blasted them into uselessness.

Parachutists, meanwhile, would have been able to surprise German long-range artillery batteries set back from the coast and to wreck bridges and roads over which German reinforcements poured to the aid of the Dieppe garrison.

The observers pointed out that the latest American dive-bombers now in service or about to go in service with the Allied air forces are better than the German Stukas but, in any case, with the kind of protection afforded by Allied fighters Wednesday the dive-bombers would not have had to worry about the foe.

The fact that the Germans flew reinforcements to the Dieppe area from all over north France, Belgium and even Holland and still took a drubbing in the air caused air strategists to wonder what would happen if they needed plane reserves in several sectors at once, as would be the case in an actual invasion.

The Germans probably have been haunted by the same doubts, they said, and as a result will rush heavy plane reinforcements to western Europe which had been earmarked for Russia.

Time Bombs Start New Fires in Battered Dieppe

Vichy, Aug. 21 (INS).—The American Rangers and British commandos have left the Dieppe area, but huge new fires have sprung up in the region from delayed-action bombs left behind by the attackers, Fernand de Brion revealed tonight.

The Vichy Ambassador to Paris gave the Parisian press details of the raid. (His sources of information, of course, were German.)

Damage in the Dieppe area was said to be extremely heavy.

Some 1800 Allied prisoners were taken, he said. Most of the prisoners are Canadians, with but few De Gaulle French.

(The Germans today announced that the total of Allied prisoners taken in the raid was slightly in excess of 2000.)

other bases which were attempting to assist them.

"Ships of our expedition gunned and sank one small transport and one gunboat.

"Considering the nature of this operation our force suffered only moderate losses.

"The naval officer commanding the expedition was Comdr. John M. Haines, U. S. Navy.

"The Marines were commanded by Lieut. Col. Evans F. Carlson, U. S. M. C. Reserve. The second in command of Marines was Maj. James Roosevelt, U. S. M. C. Reserve. None of these officers were on the casualty list."

Tokyo radio broadcasts said the Americans were repelled in hand-to-hand combat. Tokyo said the landing party came ashore in rubber boats.

Makin Island is about 1800 miles northeast of New Guinea and about 2400 miles southwest of Hawaii. The Solomon Islands, where United States Marines have captured important positions from Japanese occupying forces, lie about 1200 miles west and south.

The Gilberts form the southern point of a triangular group of islands in mid-Pacific which directly threaten United Nations supply lines from Hawaii and the United States to Australia and the southwest Pacific.

The Marshall Islands are directly north, and west of them are the heavily fortified Japanese mandated Caroline Islands, believed capable of concealing a large portion of the Japanese fleet.

Gilberts Raid Indicates Stepping-Stone Drive

By the Associated Press

The purpose of the Marine raid on Makin Island early this week seemingly was to neutralize bases developed by the Japanese in the British-owned Gilbert Islands after a United States "quickie" raid on the islands last February.

Makin Island is only about 300 miles south of the long-developed Japanese base at Jaluit, in the Japanese-owned Marshall Islands.

A few hundred miles north of Jaluit are Taroa and Wotje, strong Japanese bases which were blasted, together with Jaluit, in the United States naval foray on the Marshall and Gilbert Islands last February.

Makin Island, an atoll 16 miles long, also was hit during the February raid, and a Japanese supply ship and enemy planes were destroyed there.

The nearest major Japanese battle bases to Makin now are Ponape, about 1100 miles west, and the more important base of Truk, 460 miles farther west, both of which are in the Caroline Islands.

The surprise blow on Makin apparently is another indication that a campaign of stepping stones is under way and the American-led Allied offensive against the Japanese in the Pacific is to be a continuous one.

There are some thousand islands involved in the Japanese-held area of the western Pacific, including the islands held by the Japanese under mandate following the first World War.

The battle line of the Pacific on which Admiral Nimitz is directing his striking forces is 7000 miles long, and American units apparently now are keeping the Japanese guessing as to where the next attack will come.

Doubtful President Knew Son Would Be on Raid

By the United Press

A White House spokesman said last night he doubted that President Roosevelt knew in advance his son, James, would participate in the Marine raid on Makin Island.

"But I'm sure the President will be delighted to know that Jimmy took part, especially in that it was a successful one."

He added that the President and Mrs. Roosevelt were proud of James and their other three sons in the armed services—Elliott, Franklin, jr., and John—and asked "Why shouldn't they be?"

James is a major in the United States Marine Corps; Elliot a lieutenant colonel in the Army Air Forces; Franklin, jr., a lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy and John an ensign in the Navy.

The Makin raid was not the first time Jimmy has been under enemy fire during the war.

During a tour of the Middle East as an observer he was exposed to Axis bombing and strafing attacks.

Again in the Battle of Midway, he came under enemy fire.

Lieut. Col. Carlson, 47, who led the raids, is from Plymouth, Conn., he was commander of the Marines' Presidential Guard at Warm Springs, Ga., in 1934 and in 1937, and served as aide to Maj. Gen. Charles H. Lyman at Quantico, Va. He joined the Marines in 1922, after serving in the Army Field Artillery in France during the World War. After service n the West Indies and Nicaragua, where he was a major in the Guardia National from 1923 to 1925, he went to Shanghai in 1927 and served there for two years, then went to Peiping where he was adjutant of the Peiping Legation Guard.

In 1938 he was serving as a military observer in China, but in September of that year he announced he was resigning his Marine Corps commission, reportedly because of Navy Department objections to statements he made to the press following a trip to Communist-dominated provinces of North China and Northwest China. In 1941 he toured China's western and southwestern provinces to inspect military preparations in those areas.

British Convoy In Hard Battle Off Portugal

Lisbon, Portugal, Aug. 21 (AP).—A fierce naval and air battle today off Cape St. Vincent, the southwest tip of Portugal 200 miles northwest of Gibraltar, apparently was an attack on a British convoy, it was reported late tonight.

A British Sunderland bomber fell into the Atlantic off Sagres. Two Portuguese seaplanes flew out to rescue the survivors, but reported that the bomber already had been taken in tow by a British warship in the convoy.

Flying Fortresses Outfight Newest Nazi Combat Planes

By J. Wes Gallagher
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 21.—The Dieppe demonstration of Allied air mastery over a chosen zone of operations was followed today by Allied victory in a qualitative test of Germany's newest and best fighting planes against the American Flying Fortresses.

Eleven of the big, four-motored B-17's were over the North Sea when 20 to 25 of Germany's prized Focke-Wulf 190s tackled them.

In the 20 action-filled minutes that followed six of the attackers were destroyed or damaged.

Not one of the Fortresses was lost, although two engines of one were destroyed and a cannon shell from one of the Focke-Wulfs exploded in the cockpit, killing the copilot and injuring the pilot.

"The Fortress was hit in many other places," the United States Army Air communique added, "but no other casualties were suffered."

The North Sea foray, objective undisclosed, was the fourth by the Fortresses in five days.

Fortress crews, familiarizing themselves with the European theater, previously executed precision attacks on German railway yards at Rouen on Monday, on the big flying field at Abbeville on Wednesday in concert with the combined operations against Dieppe and on railway yards in Amiens yesterday.

These actions cost not a single plane.

The North Sea battle found the Fortresses unescorted for the first time.

The British have been amazed by the bombing accuracy of the Fortresses at the great heights where they operate. Nevertheless, air experts had doubted their ability to beat off attacks if unescorted.

When they were first tried out more than a year ago by the British, the Fortresses were criticized as under-gunned. This criticism has been met in later models which mount 13 guns—more than any British bomber.

Then expressions of doubt were heard that bombing could be accurate from more than 20,000 feet, as claimed by the confident Americans.

The Fortress performances in the first four flights more than answered this.

The value of the combined operations raid against Dieppe on Wednesday and possible future stabs at the occupied coastline as a means of forcing the German air force into great battles of extermination was receiving increasing attention.

But qualified aeronautical experts discouraged any belief that a single battle such as at Dieppe could compel the Luftwaffe to withdraw any substantial strength from the Russian front.

U. S. Fliers Sink Second Sub Off Brazil; Hunt Stepped Up

By the Associated Press

Rio de Janeiro, Aug. 21.—The loss of 169 army officers and men in the recent Axis torpedoing of the coastal vessels Baependy, Itagiba and Araraquara was officially announced today as United States and Brazilian airmen searched off the 3000-mile coastline for Axis submarines, including one which accosted a small coasting vessel with demands for fuel and food.

This is the second recent success attributed to American airmen in submarine sinkings.

The three ships were among five whose sinking in a space of three days was announced by the government last Monday. Eighty-eight soldiers were saved. There were no accurate figures on civilian losses, but it appeared certain that civilian and military victims numbered more than 600.

The government Agencia Nacional told of the incident involving the coastal ship, but did not tell the fate of the vessel. It merely reported that the coastwise ship Godiva was stopped and boarded by a hungry U-boat crew whose raider needed refueling.

The United States-Brazilian air forces carried on relentlessly to increase their known toll of three submarines sunk since the intensification of the U-boat raids last week.

Dispatches from Fortaleza told of the sinking of the third submarine by patrol planes and identified the attackers only as United States airmen—a Captain Tauney and a Lieutenant Dante.

Chinese Retake Kwangfeng, Japs Fleeing

By the United Press

Chungking, Aug. 21. — Chinese troops have recaptured Kwangfeng, walled city in eastern Kiangsi Province, and are in hot pursuit of the beaten Jap garrison retreating northeastward along the Nanchang-Hangchow Railway toward Kiangshaw, 32 miles away, it was announced today.

A communique said the enemy evacuated Kwangfeng early yesterday morning after setting the town afire. It was the fifth center on the Nanchang-Hangchow Railway lost by the invader during the last month, and its possession places the Chinese in control of more than 60 miles of that vital transport link.

Other Chinese forces were reported storming at the gates of Sungyang, Chekiang Province, supply base 80 miles southeast of Kwangfeng. The communique said the Japanese there had suffered heavy losses and were applying the torch to military facilities, indicating an early withdrawal.

Many barges crowded with Jap soldiers and supplies were said to have been sunk in the Wu River as they attempted to reach Tsingtien, 30 miles west of Wenchow.

The Central News Agency disclosed that General Chang En-to, Chinese divisional commander in the Shantung-Honan area, had turned traitor and defected to the Japanese early this month.

Meanwhile, Minister of Economy Wong Wen-hao announced in a nation-wide broadcast that the government would devote the 500-million-dollar United States loan and 200-million-dollar British loan granted to China last February toward the purchase of raw materials and the production of machinery as soon as an air transport system linking China to Allied production sources was completed.

Navy Press Chief Defends Work

Chicago, Aug. 21 (AP).—Capt. Leland P. Lovette, director of Navy Public Relations, said today that current Navy communiques were being issued with the view of presenting all of the operational information possible, consonant with national security.

He said that of 2000 ships convoyed in Atlantic coastal zones since May 14, not more than five have been lost and added that last month, for the first time since January and February, American shipyards turned out more ships than were lost.

Willkie Hopes to Sell Neutrals on U. S.

Leader to Point Out Advantages Of Allied Victor

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt indicated yesterday that Wendell L. Willkie's mission on his forthcoming trip to the Near East would be to sell the neutral countries on the magnitude of the United States' war effort and the advantages to them of a United Nations victory. He will have the title of special representative of the President.

Discussing Willkie's trip at his press conference, Mr. Roosevelt said that in some countries of the Near Eastenemy propaganda had given a distorted picture of conditions here, partiularly where the labor situation was concerned.

Willkie, the Republican Presidential nominee in 1940, is to leave shortly on an itinerary which will include Egypt, Arabia, Palestine, Syria, Turkey, Iraq and Iran, as well as Russia.

In addition to representing the President he will report to the statesmen of those countries as the leader of the minority party in the United States. In that capacity, Mr. Roosevelt remarked, his words will carry great weight.

Labor Situation Emphasized

The President went on to say that Willkie also would carry to those nations a comparison of their plight if the Axis should win with their situation under an Allied victory. They face, Mr. Roosevelt said, a reduction to the status of puppet states controlled by Germany or Italy, on the one hand, or of autonomy and democratic development on the other. It was time, he added, that they began to think of this.

The President and Willkie discussed the trip at length on Thursday, Mr. Roosevelt said, and one thing that was emphasized was the labor situation here. American news dispatches, he said, magnified small walkouts, or management shutdowns, he continued, in a way that gave the impression that such developments were common occurrences rather than rarities.

Consequently, the President added, false impressions were spread not only in the Near East but in Great Britain which enemy propaganda has seized upon. British leaders, for instance, were surprised, he said, when he told them that the effect of work stoppages on war production was infinitesimal.

WLB Report Cited

(A War Labor Board report Wednesday carried by the Associated Press said man-days lost by strikes in war production dropped from 254,653 in June to 233,614 in July, a decline of about 8 per cent, and that the loss in July represented 0.06 per cent of total man-days worked.)

As for the American war production and distribution of munitions, Mr. Roosevelt said he would never be satisfied with it, but that he was hardly blue about it. The principal problem now, he added, was getting raw materials to the plants—that priorities approved when contracts are signed do not always work out.

All of the United Nations and the neutral nations as well would like to have the output of American factories, he said, but since it is a world-wide war there was not enough to go around. He remarked that personally he would like to see a million Americans in Australia, plus all the Australians, but that it was impossible to get them there.

Meet the Wog

Wars Don't Bother Wily Desert Folk

By Harry Crockett
Wide World Staff Writer

Cairo, Aug. 21.—This, my friends, is the story of the wog—a wily Oriental gentleman.

Wars may come and wars may go, but the Arab nomad who roams the barren desert lands of Libya, goes on forever and pays little or no attention to them at all.

Dressed in Biblical garb, he rides his small but sturdy Jackass, herds his camels or his goats, and from time to time deals with foreign visitors.

It is in these deals the wog earns the "wily" part of his nickname. He drives a hard bargain. He approaches the visitor with a broad smile, salutes those in military costume and begins the conversation with something like:

"Saheedah, El Capitan!"

Everyone in uniform is a captain to the desert dweller and the "saheedah" part means "greetings."

Then starts the dealing. Perhaps he has eggs in abundance, or maybe it's a captured German Luger, machine gun or a set of binoculars, thousands of which the nomads have picked up after battles and hidden away.

The visitor—riding in motor cars and secretly looking down his nose at the desert dweller with the thought that here is a backward race, uncivilized, unchanged in thousands of years—may detect, if he looks closely enough, a similar attitude in the nomad—who is too much of a gentleman to express himself openly.

Still, it is there. You can just see him, behind his smile, saying to himself, "so those people think they are civilized!"

After all, he has his tent, his chickens, his camels or his goats.

As for us, we are associated in his mind almost entirely with war. He sees us as a bunch of well-dressed, wealthy people running around the desert shooting at one another.

Then, in addition to all that, it's anything for a laugh with the wog. Right smack bang in the middle of the desert a group of us encountered a lone traveler. He stopped, saluted, smiled and then said "mafeesh moya." He roared at his own joke.

What he meant was, "here I am in the middle of the desert and I'm all out of water."

Some joke!

Curb on Power Projects May Mean Shortage of Current in D. C.

Pepco Can't Build to Meet Rising Demand

By the Associated Press

Washington users of electric power will be greatly affected by the WPB's order yesterday halting or suspending work on the 86 power projects, including PEPCO's Buzzards Point plant here.

C. Melvin Sharpe, executive assistant of PEPCO, said last night that the Buzzards Point plant is the company's major one here and produces about one-half of the electricity for the District.

Planned Enlargement

"The order," he said, "is one of considerable concern to us. The Buzzards Point generating station is our most modern and we had plans to enlarge it. Recently we received a new 50,000-kilowatt turbine and ordered another one of the same power. Now, I guess we won't get it, although it is essential, due to the rapid growth of the city."

It was pointed out that Washingtonians will have to do with much less power for light and other purposes than they now have under the order.

Curtailment to Be Drastic

In making the announcement, the WPB said flatly that the move substantially enhanced the probability of widespread curtailment in civilian use of electricity.

By closely trimming the amount of power available for war work as well as essential civilian needs, the revision tied in closely with WPB's announced policy of stopping construction of most new war plants which cannot be completed by mid-1943.

Under the readjusted program, WPB gave the go ahead signal only to enough power projects to assure electricity for "war and indirect war production as now planned," with a "small margin" to care for possible additions to the present munitions program.

"It has been necessary to hold this margin to the minimum and the risks involved in such action represent the price that must be paid for releasing materials needed immediately for direct military uses," WPB said.

Indicating that luxury uses of power would be barred by the turn of the year, WPB declared that demands of the war program made it impossible to "preserve the standards of reliability of service observed in peace times" and that "civilian inconvenience and sacrifice must be expected, particularly during periods of drought or other adverse weather conditions or in the event of serious accidents affecting utility systems."

By revising existing priority ratings on public and private power projects throughout the country, the WPB stepped up ratings on those regarded as urgently necessary and took action to prevent the others from obtaining critical materials needed immediately for war purposes.

OCD Discovers Excellent Little Air-Raid Siren

After seven months of searching and testing, the Office of Civilian Defense announced yesterday it had found an inexpensive little siren that makes a noise loud enough to warn people against air raids.

The "V-Horn," or signalphone, they are calling it, as they point out the important fact that only 2 ounces of steel and 5 pounds of cast iron are used in its construction.

Biggest hitch to getting the little "V" into operation is the War Production Board, which has not yet approved the horn nor released priorities for it. The WPB might decide the country is getting along pretty well on the horns and sirens that have been "pieced together" already.

Washington defense officials are not happy about the volume of noise available here for raid tests, but acknowledged they can make out.

The "V-Horn" is the little brother of the large Victory Siren, OCD explains. It cannot replace the larger model, but can supplement it in larger cities and make noise by itself in smaller communities.

The OCD, wanting to be fair about the new model, lists both its advantages and disadvantages. All in its favor are these things: (1) It can be operated efficiently and effectively from the air compressor of the ordinary neighborhood filling station. (2) It takes very little critical material. (3) It costs, complete with valves for installation, about $50. (4) It carries an effective warning under average city conditions over an area of one-quarter of a square mile, making it about twice as effective as a good electric siren.

Its disadvantages are: (1) It cannot be depended upon absolutely to warn of "repeat" raids. If electric current is disrupted by a first raid and not resumed before the second, there might be no air left in the compressor tanks to make it go. (2) It must be manually operated by someone on the scene, unless it is augmented by electrical equipment for central remote control. This would involve the use of a substantial amount of critical material.

Ex-German Flier Says U.S. Training, Planes Top Reich's

New York, Aug. 21 (AP).—United States Army and Air Forces training and American warplanes are far superior to Germany's in the opinion of Staff Sergt. Paul Otto Young, who four years ago was a lieutenant in the German air force.

Young, who took out his first citizenship papers when he came to this conutry in 1938, was drafted in April, 1941. He is on duty with the Medical Corps at Camp Stewart, Ga.

He hopes when his final citizenship papers come through, he may be able to transfer to a fighting unit.

"The flying capacity of American machines is far superior," Young said. "German machines are worn out in no time."

Alcoa Locals Vote, Aug. 27, On WLB Ruling

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Aug. 21.—A conference of C. I. O. Aluminum Workers of America ended tonight after setting August 27 as a date for locals in seven big plants of the Aluminum Co. of America to vote on whether they approve the rejection of the War Labor Board's decision refusing a general wage increase to the workers.

Nick A. Zonarich, president of the union, said if the locals reject the board's decision, which the conference had done, an emergency automatically would be created under the union's constitution giving him power to call a strike.

Zonarich said, however, he would then immediately appeal from the boards decision direct to President Roosevelt, asking the Nation's Chief Executive to intervene.

Chrysler, Alcoa Walkouts Send WLB Into Action

By the Associated Press

Work stoppages at the Chrysler tank arsenal in Detroit and a Los Angeles plant of the Aluminum Co. of America sent the War Labor Board into action yesterday to get the employes back to work on important war production.

A Chrysler Corporation vice president, H. L. Weckler, reported that 47 A. F. L. construction workers stopped work at the tank arsenal on orders of Ed Thal, secretary of the Detroit Building Trades Council, in protest against the employment of some C. I. O. men. The WLB labor production division promptly went to work on the dispute, but an official said prospects for immediate settlement did not appear bright.

A walkout of 300 men at the Vernon plant of Alcoa in Los Angeles, which C. I. O. officials said was unauthorized, brought an appeal from George W. Taylor, vice chairman of the WLB, for the men to return to work at once "as loyal and patriotic citizens" in conformity with labor's no-strike pledge.

William B. Taylor, West Coast director of aviation for the C. I. O. United Automobile Workers of America, said the stoppage was precipitated by a company lockout of 30 skilled workers, but the company denied there was a lockout and George Taylor intimated in his telegram to the workers that the WLB rejection of the wage increase was the cause.

Woods Co. Officials Ordered From Plant

Boston, Aug. 21 (INS).—The president and vice president of the Army-seized S. A. Woods Machine Co. today were ordered from the plant by Maj. Ralph F. Gow of the Boston Ordnance District, now in charge of operations.

The Army first took over the company on Wednesday under presidential instructions, when management officials failed to comply with a War Labor Board order to grant arbitration and maintenance of membership to their 700 employes.

Though H. C. Dodge, president of the company, had told newspapermen he would cooperate with the Army in operating the plant Major Gow said no such offer had been received.

The Army's statement said:

"All connections of Mr. Harry C. Dodge with possession and operation of the S. A. Woods Machine Co. plant in South Boston were severed today.

"At the request of Maj. Ralph F. Gow, Ordnance Department, now operating the plant on orders of the Secretary of War, Mr. Dodge and Mr. Kingsland Dunwoody, vice president and general manager, left the plant today.

"Prodcction in all departments of the plant proceeded smoothly."

Kaiser Ship Plant Periled by Labor Row

By the United Press

Ray Stewart, spokesman for the Welders and Burners Subordinate Lodge of Oakland, Calif., announced last night his organization's executive board has voted unanimously to ask "their thousands" of welders and burners to quit their jobs at four Henry J. Kaiser shipbuilding yards at Richmond, Calif.

Stewart said the action was taken because of the "unwillingness and delay of Government officials" to intervene in a jurisdictional dispute.

McGoldrick Named As Possible Choice Of Labor Party

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 21.—A triangular struggle for the New York governorship was assured today when American Labor Party leaders met to select a candidate.

The A. L. P., which held the balance of power in the last gubernatorial election, thus refused, as it had said it would, to go along in support of Attorney General John J. Bennett, jr., who was nominated by the Democrats yesterday.

Politicians saw the decision as adding strength to the candidacy of former New York District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, who is expected to win the Republican nomination when that party meets at Saratoga Springs on Monday.

In 1938, when Gov. Herbert H. Lehman won from Dewey by 64,000 votes, the A. L. P. piled up 400,000 for the Democratic nominee.

Alex Rose, A. L. P State secretary, said in a statement: "The party leaders had a conference this afternoon and unanimously decided to have a third-party candidate for Governor of New York. They are at present continuing the deliberations on the selection of this candidate."

Their selection presumably would be put before the party's State convention opening tomorrow. The name of Joseph D. McGoldrick, New York City comptroller, has been mentioned as a possible nominee.

Earlier today Farley's grip on his party's reins in New York State—and perhaps on the delegation which will help nominate a Presidential candidate in 1944—was tightened by his reelection as chairman of the Democratic State Committee for another two-year term.

In a meeting of the committee at the National Democratic Club, Farley urged all Democrats to get behind Bennett, who he predicted would gain support not only of Democrats, but of Republicans and independents.

In Washington, where President Roosevelt declined to comment on Bennett's nomination, both Senator Norris (Independent) of Nebraska and Senator Bridges (Republican) of New Hampshire saw a badly split New York Democracy. Norris thought the nomination would have a "bad effect on the country" because it wold be taken as a "very severe slap at the President."

Others declared it again brought Farley to the forefront as a national figure.

George Hints Rise in House Tax Figure

By the Associated Press

Hinting at the possibility of higher individual income tax rates than were voted by the House, Chairman George (Democrat), Georgia, announced yesterday that the Senate Finance Committee would take up that phase of the new tax bill Monday when it begins two weeks of executive sessions.

"If we are serious about paying for this war, and checking the rising living costs due to inflation, now is the time for us to act," he told a press conference.

He left no doubt that extended consideration would be given to the Ruml "pay as you go" system of collecting income taxes, and said if the plan were adopted it certainly should be coupled with a system of collecting taxes at the source of the incomes.

George said he considered the individual income taxpayers the keystone of the Nation's revenue system and added:

"From the standpoint of the Treasury, this is the harvest time, and later on with declining income it will be too late."

Without specifically indorsing the Ruml plan, George said he thought "one of the greatest things that could be done for the salaried person" would be to put his income taxes on a current basis.

That was the nub of the plan advanced by Beardsley Ruml, chairman of the New York Federal Reserve Bank. He proposed that by a simple bookkeeping operation, the taxes on 1942 incomes which normally would fall due next year be canceled, and the tax collected be credited against 1943 income with appropriate adjustments made at the year's end.

"If any adaptation of the Ruml plan is accepted," George declared, "it will be necessary to consider some means of collecting the tax at the source, for without such collection the plan would somewhat nullify itself."

George expressed the opinion that the source tax should at least be equal to the 6 per cent normal tax—"and to make it a worthwhile experiment I think the normal tax should be raised."

2 S. C. Girls Freed After Spending Night in Elevator

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 21 (AP).—Two 'teen-aged Columbia girls spent 13 anxious hours trapped in an elevator of the State Capitol here before they were freed by a capitol policeman about 7:30 a. m. today.

The girls, Janet Wiles, 13, and Betsy Stipple, 14, appeared none the worse for their trying experience, although at one time they feared suffocation and began writing a farewell note. They said they entered the elevator to play about 5:45 p. m. after State offices had closed for the night.

H. A. Shipp, building policeman, said they presumably pressed the "up" button on the automatic elevator and then pressed an emergency button which shut off the motors and locked the door. He heard their cries for help when he opened the building this morning.

Anglo-U.S. Food Pool Faces Allocation Problem

By the Associated Press

The British-American- Combined Food Board described as "an immediate problem" yesterday the allocation among the United Nations of needed food supplies, to be drawn from pooled stocks of the United States and the United Kingdom.

Announcing establishment of a headquarters and staff in Washington, the board outlined its policies for the first time, including its intention of investigating and attempting to solve problems of supply, production, transportation and allocation of food throughout the world.

Secretary of Agriculture Wickard and R. H. Brand, head of the British Food Mission, who compose the combined board, declared in a joint statement that "in principle, the entire food resources of the United States and the United Kingdom will be deemed to be in a common pool."

"One immediate problem facing the board is the allocation among the United Nations of food and food material in relatively short supply," the statement continued. "Another immediate problem is the development of ways and means of insuring that the production and distribution of food is planned in such a way as to cut down the amount of shipping space required for food transport.

"Whatever measures the board may be able to develop to this end will release tonnage for the transport of troops and munitions."

Problems of food management for the United Nations first will be studied by committees, the board said, each committee considering specific questions. Interests of the other United Nations, as well as of America and Great Britain, will be represented on the committees.

Intern Lady Astor, Labor Group Asks

London, Aug. 21 (U.P.).—The London Star said today that the British Trades Union Congress executive committee has received a resolution demanding that Virginia-born Lady Astor be interned under the defense act and her seat in Parliament declared vacant.

The reported move against Lady Astor presumably was prompted by her recent speech in which she asserted that the Russians "are fighting for themselves, not for us." Later she issued a statement saying she meant no belittlement of the Soviet war effort.

Patent Hearing Rows Force Peace Parley

An emergency "peace" conference between officials of the Justice Department and the Standard Oil Co. brought assurance last night that the two groups would stick to discussion rather than let a champion from each side fight out a sharp difference of opinion about how the prewar dealings of Standard and the German I. G. Farbenindustrie should be interpreted.

The fighting issue was raised during the final minutes of a three-day Senate Patents Committee hearing on Standard's prewar operations, when Robert M. Hunter, special assistant to Attorney General Biddle, accused five of six Standard Oil witnesses of having made misstatements of fact.

Haslam Fighting Mad

Dr. R. T. Haslam, husky 6-foot vice president of Standard Oil of New Jersey, leaped to his feet and told Chairman Bone (Democrat) of Washington that he resented Hunter's remark personally.

Haslam asked if the statement was not withdrawn what recourse he would have, and remarked, "I know one."

Senator Bone suggested that as chairman of the committee he should retain the right to generate the heat, while Senator Clark (Democrat) of Idaho joined with him in urging Hunter to withdraw his charge.

Hunter said he would withdraw the remark that the witnesses had made deliberate misstatements, but has reiterated that of the six witnesses he would take the word of only one, that of E. V. Murphree, vice president of the Standard Oil Development Co.

Interchange Ruled Out

Bone ruled that the interchange should be stricken from the record, while Hunter suggested that differences be straightened out afterward in a conference with Standard officials.

A moment after the committee recessed Haslam leaned over the table to ask Hunter about the proposed conference.

Hunter, slighter in build than Haslam, asked if he would need a bodyguard. Haslam, unappeased, asked Hunter his age. "I'm 47," said Hunter.

"I'm 54," Haslam replied, "so there would be no inequality if we should meet outside."

"Does that mean you're going to beat me up," Hunter asked.

"I may," replied Haslam.

They concluded by stepping over to Senator Bone, where Hunter repeated his withdrawal of the remark about misstatements of fact.

Later, representatives of both sides conferred at the Justice Department and agreed, it was understood, to have further conferences about interpretation of documents in the records of the Bone Committee.

Farish Cites Aid to U. S.

Key witness throughout the three-day hearing was William S. Farish, president of Standard Oil of New Jersey, who insisted through yesterday's session that his company's prewar agreements with I. G. Farbenindustrie had worked to benefit this country's war effort, rather than to impede it as charged earlier by Justice Department witnesses.

Farish and Frank A. Howard, president of Standard Oil Development Co., said that the prewar agreements, formed in 1927 and 1929 and terminated by a consent decree last March, provided principally for Standard's use of I. G. patents in the world outside of Germany.

Under questioning by Committee Counsel Creekmore Fath, Farish denied that the agreements were an attempt to stifle competition, or to make a division of territory. He explained how, since the war, Standard had been following the desire of the Government for complete technical cooperation through industry, by entering pools with other firms for producing many of the war materials which he said Standard had obtained for America through its dealings with I. G. Farbenindustrie. These products included synthetic rubber, and products needed for making synthetic rubber, high-octane gasoline for aviation engines, and products needed for making military explosives, Farish said.

Oil Rationing Put Up to Committee

gels daily of all petroleum liquids, representing an increase of 24,300 barrels daily in the California rate as compared with August figures.

The three-man committee, with which Nelson will sit in an advisory capacity, has two problems before it—whether to ration the fuel oil, and if so, to what etent.

While officials in one related agency said there was little doubt that rationing would be necessary to solve the distribution and shortage problem, other officials said they believed voluntary cuts in usage, and widespread conversion of oil burners would provide an answer.

The order prohibiting transportation by tank cars of fuel oils, affected the following States:

Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North and South Dakota.

A spokesman for the oil coordinator, explaining that, under the order, the additional cars would be placed in service to transport fuel oil to the East, warned that the prohibition, and the re-assigning of cars, does not mean that the East Coast petroleum shortage was licked.

Pettengill Shifted

Reichmuth To Command Navy Yard

VICE ADMIRAL REICHMUTH

REAR ADMIRAL PETTENGILL

Vice Admiral Ferdinand L. Reichmuth will succeed Rear Admiral George T. Pettengill September 15 as commandant of the Washington Navy Yard, commander of the Potomac River Command and superintendent of the Naval Gun Factory, the Navy announced yesterday.

Admiral Pettengill will be transferred to duty in the Bureau of Naval Personnel here.

Admiral Reichmuth, 58, who was captain of the yard and assistant superintendent of the gun factory here from May 31, 1938, to June 5, 1940, will resume his permanent rank of rear admiral on assuming his new duties. He has recently been on sea duty as commander of destroyers, Atlantic Fleet.

A native of Beloit, Kans., whose legal residence now is Palo Alto, Calif., Admiral Reichmuth comes to the Navy Yard with a record of 36 years' naval experience, much of it on sea duty.

During the first World War he served on the battleships Oklahoma, which was destroyed at Pearl Harbor, and Michigan and from 1918 to 1920 was on duty here in the Bureau of Ordnance.

Subsequent service included duty as force gunnery officer and aide on the staff of the Pacific Fleet battleship force commander; commander of the U. S. S. Cuyama, commander of destroyer division 30, battle fleet; commander of the U. S. S. Moody, commander of the U. S. S. Chaumont, chief of staff and aide to the commander of battleships, battle force, and commander of the battleship Mississippi.

He holds the Victory Medal, Atlantic Fleet Clasp for service on the Oklahoma during the first World War.

Admiral Pettengill, hero of the Spanish-American War, the Boxer Rebellion and World War I, took command of the Navy Yard here July 14, 1936.

Each session will have panel members active in Virginia labor circles. Workers will come from union locals in Richmond, Roanoke, Petersburg, Lynchburg and Front Royal.

$100,000 Asked In Collision Suit

Damages of $100,000 were asked in a suit filed in District Court yesterday by Robert W. Lassiter of 1027 Ninth Street Northwest for injuries he said he received when a truck and the car in which he was riding collided last November on the Washington-Baltimore Boulevard near the University of Maryland.

Named as defendant was the Horton Motor Lines, Inc., of 1936 Montana Avenue Northeast, operators of the truck.

Lassiter claimed in the petition, which was filed by Attorney Charles H. Quimby, that as a result of the accident he is unable to pursue his occupation.

Axis Will Pay For Atrocities, President Says

Churchill Also Wrathful

It was the second time that President Roosevelt has been aroused to action by Axis atrocities. On October 25 last he vigorously condemned the German 50-for-1 execution of "innocent hostages" in France. He said they were "the acts of desperate men who know in their hearts that they cannot win."

Prime Minister Churchill joined President Roosevelt in his wrath at that time, issuing a statement in which he denounced the "butcheries" in France and said "retribution for these crimes must henceforth take its place among the major purposes of the war."

The President said yesterday that it had been hoped that such atrocities as the shooting of innocent hostages would decline. But on the contrary, he said, they had increased. He mentioned developments in Holland, France and Norway, and said that similar incidents were probable in Poland and Czechoslovakia.

His statement follows:

"The Secretary of State recently forwarded to me a communication signed by the Ambassador of the Netherlands and the Ministers of Yugoslavia and Luxembourg on behalf of the governments of Belgium, Greece, Luxembourg, Norway, the Netherlands, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and the French national committee in London, calling attention to the barbaric crimes against civilian populations which are being committed in occupied countries, particularly on the continent of Europe.

"In this communication, attention was invited to the declaration signed in London on January 13, 1942, by the representatives of nine governments whose countries are under German occupation. This declaration affirmed that acts of violence thus perpetrated against the civilian populations are at variance with accepted ideas concerning acts of war and political offenses as these are understood by civilized nations; stated that the punishment, through the channel of organized justice of those guilty and responsible for these crimes, is one of the principal war aims of the contracting governments; and recorded the determination of the contracting governments in a spirit of international solidarity to see to it that those guilty and responsible, whatever their nationality, are handed over to justice and tried and that the sentences pronounced are carried out.

"The communication which I have just received from the chiefs of mission of the Netherlands, Yugoslavia and Luxembourg states that these acts of oppression and terror have taken proportions and forms giving rise to the fear that as the defeat of the enemy countries approaches, the barbaric and unrelenting character of the occupational regime will become more marked and may even lead to the extermination of certain populations.

"As I stated in October 25, 1941:

'The practice of executing scores of innocent hostages in reprisal for isolated attacks on Germans in countries temporarily under the Nazi heel revolts a world already inured to suffering and brutality. Civilized peoples long ago adopted the basic principle that no man should be punished for the deed of another. Unable to apprehend the persons involved in these attacks the Nazis characteristically slaughter 50 or a hundred innocent persons. Those who would 'collaborate' with Hitler or try to appease him cannot ignore this ghastly warning.

'The Nazis might have learned from the last war the impossibility of breaking men's spirit by terrorism. Instead they develop their 'lebensraum' and 'new order' by depths of frightfulness which even they have never approached before. These are the acts of desperate men who know in their hearts that they cannot win. Frightfulness can never bring peace to Europe. It only sows the seeds of hatred which will one day bring fearful retribution.'

"The Government of the United States has been aware for some time of these crimes. Our Government is constantly receiving additional information from dependable sources and it welcomes reports from any trustworthy source which would assist in keeping our growing fund of information and evidence up to date and reliable.

"The United Nations are going to win this war. When victory has been achieved, it is the purpose of the Government of the United States, as I know it is the purpose of each of the United Nations, to make appropriate use of the information and evidence in respect to these barbaric crimes of the invaders, in Europe and in Asia. It seems only fair that they should have this warning that the time will come when they shall have to stand in courts of law in the very countries which they are now oppressing and answer for their acts."

In spite of extremely low visibility, Lieutenant Atherton succeeded in locating the raft with a lone survivor . . . Landing was made under hazardous condition of wind and sea. Revamped Navy General Board Devoid of Flying Officers former commander in chief of the United States Fleet, and an outstanding ordnance and gunnery expert.

Rear Admiral Walton Rfi Sexton, retired, former assistant chief of naval operations and commander of the fleet battleships.

Rear Admiral Gilbert J. Rowcliff, an outstanding tactician and gunnery expert. He once headed the department of engineering and aeronautics at the Naval Academy, but has had no aviation assignments afloat.

Capt. Harry L. Pence, retired, who has commanded the cruiser Memphis and a squadron of destroyers. In 1921 he had charge of a dirigible detachment in England, but has had no other air assignments.

Capt. John J. Mahoney, secretary of the board, who has spent much of his service on destroyers, commanding a number of them. He served aboard the aircraft carrier Lexington for about a year in 1935, but has had little or no other aviation experience.

Plays a Vital Role

Although the General Board has no administrative functions, it plays an important role in the determination of fundamental naval policy and in reaching decisions as to the number and types of ships and planes to be constructed. It recommends to the Secretary of the Navy the proportion of aircraft carriers, battleships, cruisers, etc., to be built.

A change in Navy regulations adopted in recent years, Article 403(6), directs that it consider and recommend to the Secretary the general military characteristics of naval aircraft.

The Navy's announcement of the reorganization of the board had this to say:

"The duties and responsibilities of the General Board have increased greatly since America's entry into the war as a belligerent. The wartime reorganization brings to the board a group of outstanding naval officers well qualified through long experience to deal with the vital problems constantly arising under the stress of war . . .

"Importance of the General Board, especially in time of war, is apparent from the nature of its duties. The board studies and recommends naval policy covering a wide range of subjects, including number, type and design of vessels and aircraft, after consideration of all available civil and military information bearing thereon.

"It keeps itself informed on the developing science of warfare, with a view to recommending such changes in the size and constitution of the fleet and of its component parts as may be necessitated by changing conditions."

And "changing conditions" in the "developing science of warfare" have resulted almost entirely from the increasing potence of air power.

2 Wild Bulls Lead Chicago Police On Merry Chase

Chicago, Aug. 21 (INS).—"Two wild bulls are loose," was the alarm that was cried over the police radio today, and the pintos which ride the range in the vicinity of the Chicago stockyards—10 squad cars carrying yip-yipping boys in blue—began to close in.

The two wild bulls dashed into side streets and alleys, and then threw an area of 20 square blocks into uproar.

At one point a child was in their path, and Mrs. Mary Nichols, a housewife, picked it up and tossed it over a fence to safety, but she was knocked down and bruised.

Finally two squad cars closed in and Policemen Edward O'Malley and Walter Miller leaped from their charging machines. But the wild bulls charged, too.

O'Malley was tossed 30 feet; Miller a mere 15.

Nelson to Tell 'Get-Tough' Plans Today

and say: "That's all you can have—no more," it was pointed out.

Under the plan, priorities would continue to be awarded by the Army and Navy, as well as WPB, but within the strict limits of the master production plan. Since the program would be revamped at least every quarter, the different parts of the program could be kept in gear. WPB would be able to see that proper scheduling of all phases of production is taking place by checking production progress reports regularly and readjusting the program accordingly, it was said.

In operation, it is expected that the plan would involve considerable lopping off of nonessential and incomplete phases of the overall program. Work is being done in WPB to make a test application of the program in the last quarter of this year, provided Nelson gives his approval. Full-scale application of the plan would then be made in the first quarter of 1943.

One feature of this plan is that priorities and the production requirements plan would operate to make it effective. Priorities would be restricted to uses approved under the plan and the production requirements plan would provide a guide to the materials demands of all manufacturers who use up critical materials.

Existence of the plan was learned following reports that Nelson planned to take decisive action on two key fronts—materials and scheduling of production—whether a finish fight with the military was involved or not. Adoption of the plan would involve action in the two fields of materials and schedules.

Labor Action Expected

Labor dissatisfaction with WPB was expected to come to a head Monday when representatives of 18 A. F. L. and C. I. O. unions will meet with WPB officials to discuss production problems.

At least nine labor consultants have already resigned within the last few months either to take other Government jobs or to return to their unions, it was learned. Most recent resignation was that of Richard A. Lester, chief consultant in the WPB labor production division, who has accepted a job with the War Man Power Commission. When questioned by a reporter Lester stated that he had panned to take the job with the Man Power Commission for several months. He added that his resignation has no relationship to current developments at WPB, although he admitted that officials of the labor production division have suffered "considerable depression" lately.

The C. I. O. resolution, which was prepared by the three C. I. O. members of Nelson's unofficial labor policy committee and submitted to C. I. O. executive officers for approval, called attention to impending shutdowns of vital war plants "at the very time when American boys are sacrificing their lives to the cause of freedom on the shores of France and in the Solomon Islands."

Commenting on Libbey's dismissal, the C. I. O. stated that "the only conclusion to be drawn is that Mr. Libbey was fired for telling the truth." Asking that he be reinstated, the C. I. O. stated that "labor has felt that the time for removing the dead wood, the misfits and those who think in terms of competitive business habits and business-as-usual, is long past due."

The resolution added "The war effort will continue to be impeded if the men who dare to criticize constructively the shortcomings of the war effort are being discharged while those who lack the courage and vision, and who are responsible for the present material shortages, are permitted to remain snugly entrenched in their positions of power an dauthority."

Extortion Letter Writer Sentenced

New York, Aug. 21.—J. Duane Upton, grocery clerk of Erie, Pa., received a suspended sentence and was placed on three years probation today in court on his plea of guilty to an indictment charging him with sending an extortion letter in an effort to obtain handwritten copies of poems by Edna St. Vincent Millay.

Upton admitted he sent a letter last February to Eugene Jan Boissevain, Miss Millay's husband, stating he was conducting an autograph column for a magazine and wanted longhand copies of certain of Miss Millay's poems. Failure to comply with his request, Upton wrote, would compel him to publish a letter which, he said, Miss Millay's sister, Kathleen had sent him.

This letter, Upton informed Boissevain, was to the effect that Kathleen was in danger of starvation.

Pastor Convicted In Spy Conspiracy

47-year-old clergyman was remanded into the custody of the marshal.

Molzahn, seated at the counsel table, and his wife, sitting some 15 feet away with a group of friends, both looked tired and drawn after the ordeal of the trial, but neither displayed any emotion at the verdict. When he was led from the courtroom, Molzahn quietly kissed his wife farewell.

The aim of the conspirators was to collect information about the United States Army, Navy, Air Force and defense industries and deliver it to Japan or Germany through Kunze, the Government claimed.

Molzahn's part, the Government charged, was to help Kunze obtain the passport of some neutral country other than the United States.

Trial Near End

Bahr Quizzed On Relations With Gestapo

By the Associated Press

Newark, N. J., Aug. 21.—The Government completed its cross-examination of Herbert Karl Friedrich Bahr in his espionage conspiracy trial today and Bahr's attorney said he would rest his case in "another couple of hours." The trial was recessed until Monday.

Bahr was cross-examined for seven hours on these points:

1. His original meeting with the Gestapo and his relations with that organization in Germany.

2. His part in a plan to "break" a German firm's contract with the General Electric Co. in this country.

3. His knowledge of a steam turbine reportedly being tested in Germany to power airplanes and the source of plans included in a thesis he wrote at Hanover (Germany) Technical Institute for a turbine of advanced design.

He said he was given no instructions for forwarding information to Germany when he left for this country, but that he had been told he would be sent the locations of "mail drops" after he had become established here. He was arrested last month when he arrived at Jersey City on the Drottningholm.

Bahr described briefly 10 days in the Gestapo offices, where he was tutored in the use of invisible ink. He said he underwent Gestapo training and encouraged their agents to believe he would do their bidding in America in order to return to this country.

"I could never get enough money to get back," he said. "I would get a job, and then I would be out of work for a couple of months. I couldn't save any."

He said that during his negotiations with the Nazi agents, he entertained mental reservations not to carry out plans proposed to him.

Food Prices Rise 2.5% in Month

week or so. When a reporter observed that he had heard the plan would envision the setting up of a "super" board to be known as the economic stabilization board the President merely observed that the story might be wrong.

With Henderson implying that he should have still larger areas of control in order to keep the price picture from getting out of hand, he added that there would soon be a tightening of those controls which he did have. The period of "education" of the public is now "about over" he declared, with strict enforcement expected of ceiling violations. Among the "teeth" in the law is one which permits the person overcharged to sue a retailer for either three times the amount of the overcharge, or $50, whichever is greater.

Coincidentally with the announcement by Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, that he was proposing to enforce a price ceiling on livestock and to rescind the 110 per cent of parity feature in the price law, a powerful ally rallied to the Secretary's standard in James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers Union. After a conference with the President and with Secretary Wickard at the White House, Patton said that farmers "should get parity and no more."

Senator Hugh A. Butler (Republican) of Nebraska meanwhile called on Secretary Wickard to readjust the ceiling on wholesale beef prices "to permit American cattlemen to cover costs and go on producing without going broke."

In his statement to American housewives, Henderson pointed out that the Bureau of Labor Statistics had issued cost of living figures which showed that, between mid-June and mid-July, uncontrolled food prices had advanced 2.5 per cent while those food prices under OPA controls rose only 0.3 per cent. In the same period, prices of all unregulated goods and services advanced 1.6 per cent, while prices of controlled items showed a nominal increase of 0.1 per cent, largely as result of higher prices allowed for gasoline and fuel oil in the East which have later been rescinded.

do not contribute either to the accuracy or consistency of public information."

This situation "is, of course, pounced upon, exploited and intensified by opponents of our war effort," the President said. "In a recent report to me on this situation, Mr. Davis made a statement which should be emphasized: 'The enemy is constantly at work trying to undermine public confidence in the Government; why should members of that Government help him along by undermining it themselves?'"

Almost by way of illustration, President Roosevelt later answered a press conference request for comment on the defeat of his candidate, Senator Mead, at the New York gubernatorial convention, by reading excerpts from an article by Mark Sullivan which appeared in yesterday's editions of The Washington Post and the New York Herald Tribune.

Mark Sullivan's article was devoted to a description of a press conference held by Undersecretary of War Patterson recently. The section read by the President follows:

"When the time for questioning came, it was foreordained that the first would be about the matter most immediately in the news, the commando raid in France the day before, and the American participation in it. The newsmen asked if Mr. Patterson had any comment. The question was asked in a manner which indicated that the questioner really did not have much hope for an answer. By thus setting his expectations below his hopes, he escaped disappointment. Mr. Patterson said merely that he had no worth-while comment.

"If Mr. Patterson has no copyright on those four short words, 'no worth-while comment,' they could be advantageously used by some other Washington officials who face press conferences. (Here the President grinned broadly and went on.)

Effort to Plug "Leaks" Seen

"If all officials were as immune as the impassive Mr. Patterson from feeling that courtesy, or other motive, requires them to satisfy the newsmen with something interesting or amusing—in that event, the quantity of words that go out of Washington would become at once diminished and more informative."

The President's remarks were interpreted in some quarters as an effort to plug "leaks" on partially formed Government plans by officials who have a partisan interest in the success or failure of these plans. It was pointed out that War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson took action on such a "leak" recently when he ordered the dismissal of Frederick I. Libbey, an engineering consultant, after newspaper stories appeared on a report by Libbey which was critical of the iron and steel branch.

"Where honest differences of opinion exist, no one would propose to suppress them," Mr. Roosevelt wrote. "Nor would anyone attempt to interfere with the free use by every public official of the normal processes of information to the public press. But it is no solution to a controverted question to argue it out in public. If the agencies would refrain from resorting to public debate of this kind, they would have a good deal more time to attend to their business, and the Nation would have a good deal more assurances that their business was being done right."

Stalingrad Battle Reaches Crisis

fight for control of both river sides.

The Red armies fighting in the Caucasian foothills south of Krasnodar on the road to the Black Sea port of Novorossisk still were falling back. The Russians were officially reported to have killed more than 2500 Germans before retiring to new positions.

The communique reported the Russians repulsed enemy attacks southeast of Pyatigorsk. There the German drive was along an asphalt road leading to Nalchik, 50 miles beyond. Nalchik in turn is only 100 miles west of the Russian oil city of Grozny.

Soviet bombers were engaged in heavy defensive action over this entire area, but also went over to the offensive Thursday night with a long-range bombing of Warsaw in occupied Poland, Eastern Prussia and Upper Silesia.

"A large force" of Soviet bombers "caused 14 big fires in Warsaw, and 19 explosions were observed," an announcement said. Warsaw is more than 700 miles from Moscow, and the Russians said all their planes returned.

Russian dispatches said the Germans were pouring fresh troops, at least two divisions strong, into the critical Don bend area above Stalingrad.

A hot sector of the Caucasian front was south and west of Krasnodar, in the mountain passes approaching the Russian naval station of Novorossisk (no longer used by the Soviet Black Sea fleet).

The Germans were trying desperately to develop a major push. In a two-hour battle, Don and Kuban Cossack warriors cut down several hundred parachutists.

One of these fighters with his four Cossack sons slashed nearly 50 Germans to death.

In continued fighting on the Leningrad front, the Russians were reported to have taken a strongly fortified point on a railway and to have held it after five heavy German counterattacks.

Yesterday was the first anniversary of Hitler's futile siege of Leningrad by 500,000 soldiers, 6000 big guns and 1000 tanks.

Russian Crossing Foiled, Nazis Say

Berlin, Aug. 21 (German Broadcasts Recorded by U.P. in New York).—Several Russian attempts to cross the Don River have been frustrated, the German high command reported today.

(The Berlin communique gave no details of the attempted river crossings, not even mentioning the sector involved. The report seemingly conflicted with Moscow admissions that the Russians were fighting heavy defensive battles against German forces which crossed the Don west of Stalingrad.)

Axis Agents' Jury Seeks Witnesses

By Dillard Stokes

Post Staff Writer

Federal prosecutors opened a search for new witnesses—whose names were not revealed after examining four persons before the special grand jury on Axis agents yesterday.

The summonses issued for yesterday suggested that the grand jurors were investigating the secret $25,000 paid Representative Hamilton Fish by the Dominican dictator, Gen. Rafael L. Trujillo, in 1939, just before Fish's trip to Germany, where he conferred with Von Ribbentrop, the Nazi foreign minister. Fish claims the $25,000 was given him as an agent, to speculate in oil for Trujillo.

The prosecutors, however, refused to confirm this, although yesterday's grand jury session was important enough for Special Prosecutor William Power Maloney to break off his vacation to hurry here to take part.

Russian Questioned Again

Those questioned by Maloney and Special Prosecutor John T. M. Reddan were:

George Jamhar Djamgaroff, the suave White Russian mystery man who was Trujillo's $50,000 a year agent at the time Fish got the money.

Ray Helgersen, former Washington newspaperman, who was a Dominican press agent in 1938.

Sid Boehm, New York newspaperman, who made an extensive investigation of Axis and bund activities and was a star witness against the Nazi propaganda agency, Transocean News.

A striking brunette girl who spent only a few minutes before the grand jurors and whose name was not given out.

The three men visited the Department of Justice after the grand jurors adjourned, to reconvene on September 16, unless developments require them to be recalled before.

Morale Plot Case Ahead

Besides continuing the investigation now in progress, Maloney and Reddan will be engaged in preparing for the trial of 28 persons indicted last month on charges of conspiring, both before and after Pearl Harbor, to foment disloyalty and mutiny in the armed forces.

Several of these are free on bond, others are in various jails and three are still fugitives. These are William Robert Lyman, official of the National Workers League; Victor Broenstrupp, an attorney for William Dudley Pelley, and Edward James Smythe, a writer for the seditious paper Publicity.

Pelley was brought here Thursday from the Federal Penitentiary at Terre Haute, Ind., where he is serving 15 years for sedition and another conspiracy. When he had pleaded "not guilty" he was ordered taken back to the prison, to his evident disappointment.

As "chief" of the Silver Shirts, which he envisioned as the storm troops who would make him "chief" of this country, Pelley sported a silver-gray goatee. He was still sporting it when he was locked up at Terre Haute last week.

But when two guards led the "chief" into the District Court day before yesterday, his chin was clean shaven.

Telegrams Link Treason Suspects to Nazi Spy

The Federal grand jury in Chicago yesterday completed two days of hearing evidence against confederates of the Nazi spies electrocuted here two weeks ago. Indictments for treason, carrying the death penalty, are sought.

Before the jurors was a file of telegrams exchanged between Chicago and Tokyo last December 7. One of the executed men, Herbert Haupt, Chicago, is alleged to have been in the Japanese capital the day war broke out. He had fled from America to Mexico and eventually reached Germany, where the Nazis decorated him, trained him in sabotage and sent him back with seven others to operate in the United States.

Four Negro porters and two hotel managers from Jacksonville, Fla., were witnesses yesterday. Four of the spies, including Haupt, are believed to have stopped at the hotel after landing from their submarine.

Jailed in Chicago, pending the grand jury enquiry are Haupt's parents, uncle and aunt and two friends of the family.

Navy Also Discloses That Comdr. Hanson Died on War Duty

The death of Commander Malcolm Parker Hanson, 4615 Langdrum Lane, Chevy Chase, Md., previously reported to his family as having occurred in an airplane accident, was stated by the Navy Department yesterday to have been directly connected with a war operation.

HANSON

It was reported in the ninth casualty list issued by the department, in which were included also the names of three men from this area listed as missing.

131 Names Included

The entire list included 131 names, from the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard. "The preponderant share of these casualties," it was stated, "resulted from direct action with the enemy, but included . . . are those who were lost in accidents at sea and in the air on duty directly connected with wartime operations."

Those from this section reported missing were:

Linton Ray Ramsey, boatswain's mate first class, U. S. N., brother-in-law of C. H. Martindale, 1926 Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest.

Commander Hanson was chief radio engineer with Admiral Byrd's expedition in 1928-30 and from 1930 to 1937 was in charge of the radio test laboratory at the Anacostia Naval Air Station. He was awarded the gold medal of the Veteran Wireless Operators Association for his services with the Byrd expedition.

In 1940 he was transferred from active duty in the Bureau of Ships, Navy Department, to duty with the Bureau of Aeronautics. He saw service with the Naval Reserve during World War I and was commissioned an ensign in 1918. His family lives at the Langdrum Lane address.

Sailor's Wife Here

Walstrom, whose wife, Margaret Skillman Walstrom, lives with her sister, Mrs. Claiborn Bagley, at 815 Allison Street Northwest, was last heard from in the Asiatic area. He has been in the Navy for about 13 years and for the past three years had been stationed in Shanghai, which his wife, a War Department employe, was forced to evacuate with others two years ago. He is a native of Randolph, Kans.

WALSTROM

Ramsey was retired in 1930 in Shanghai after 16 years service with the Navy, and established a small business there. He reentered service in 1941 and was last heard from in Manila. He is a native of Ramsey, W. Va., and was stationed in Washington early in his Navy career.

Reuben Schierman, 25, United States Naval Reserve, is a native of Endicott, Wash., and was employed in Woodward & Lothrop's department store as a tailor at the time of his enlistment last year. His wife, Mrs. Ethel Atkinson Schierman, is an employe of the Navy Department.

Casualties reported yesterday were in the period from July 26 to August 12, and include 54 dead; two wounded and 75 missing.

D.C. Firm Awarded Va. Hospital Job

By the Associated Press

The office of Representative Robertson (Democrat) of Virginia said yesterday it was notified by Army engineers that a contract for construction of the Woodrow Wilson Army General Hospital near Staunton, Va., had been awarded the Jefferess-Dyer Co., Washington. Construction will be of brick.

The company's low bid was "between $2,700,000 and $2,800,000," it was said. Bids on permanent type construction, Robertson's office said, averaged only about $500,000 more than for frame construction which led to the decision to adop the permanent type.

ODT Bans Use of Taxis For Sightseeing Tours

The Office of Defense Transportation yesterday decreed that effective September 10, no more motor vehicles using rubber tires may be used for sightseeing tours.

In July ODT forbade all such sightseeing services in buses, including all vehicles with a capacity of 10 or more persons.

It was learned from several cab companies that very few of their cabs realized any profits on sightseeing tours, and that requests for such orders had decreased notably since the outbreak of the war. Around July 22, it was said, some of the companies asked their drivers to cut down on the number of tours of the city to help save gas and tires.

The Blue Light Co., comprising three different groups of cab drivers, said, however, that about 70 per cent of their members, numbering 700, would be greatly affected by the order, for most of their business is that of touring.

An indefinite number of limousine owners will be cut off entirely unless they can turn to carrying defense workers to and from work, it was said. The Atwood Bus Co. has sent all its cars to Camp Pickett, Va., for business with soldiers only. Another, the Orr Lines, transports inspectors and government officials to and from nearby Army camps and growing grounds. One company confines, for the most part, its work to carrying soldiers to and from Fort Belvoir.

Dependents May Get Service Checks Within 2 Weeks

By the Associated Press

Some dependents of service men may receive their first Government allowances within two weeks or less, the War and Navy Departments indicated last night after President Roosevelt signed the bill permitting the allowances to be paid as soon as bookkeeping can be completed.

The War Department said that checks covering the first applications to be approved would go out shortly after September 1, while the Navy said it was "prepared to make payment almost immediately on all applications which have been received and approved."

First Army payments will include all sums accrued up to September 1, and subsequent payments shortly after the first of each month will be made on a similar basis.

Patent Hearing Rows Force Peace Parley

An emergency "peace" conference between officials of the Justice Department and the Standard Oil Co. brought assurance last night that the two groups would stick to discussion rather than let a champion from each side fight out a sharp difference of opinion about how the prewar dealings of Standard and the German I. G. Farbenindustrie should be interpreted.

The fighting issue was raised during the final minutes of a three-day Senate Patents Committee hearing on Standard's prewar operations, when Robert M. Hunter, special assistant to Attorney General Biddle, accused five of six Standard Oil witnesses of having made misstatements of fact.

Haslam Fighting Mad

Dr. R. T. Haslam, husky 6-foot vice president of Standard Oil of New Jersey, leaped to his feet and told Chairman Bone (Democrat) of Washington that he resented Hunter's remark personally.

Haslam asked if the statement was not withdrawn what recourse he would have, and remarked, "I know one."

Senator Bone suggested that as chairman of the committee he should retain the right to generate the heat, while Senator Clark (Democrat) of Idaho joined with him in urging Hunter to withdraw his charge.

Hunter said he would withdraw the remark that the witnesses had made deliberate misstatements, but late reiterated that of the six witnesses he would take the word of only one, that of E. V. Murphree, vice president of the Standard Oil Development Co.

Interchange Ruled Out

Bone ruled that the interchange should be stricken from the record, while Hunter suggested that differences be straightened out afterward in a conference with Standard officials.

A moment after the committee recessed Haslam leaned over the table to ask Hunter about the proposed conference.

Hunter, slighter in build than Haslam, asked if he would need a bodyguard. Haslam, unappeased, asked Hunter his age. "I'm 47," said Hunter.

"I'm 54," Haslam replied, "so there would be no inequality if we should meet outside."

"Does that mean you're going to beat me up," Hunter asked.

"I may," replied Haslam.

They concluded by stepping over to Senator Bone, where Hunter repeated his withdrawal of the remark about misstatements of fact.

Later, representatives of both sides conferred at the Justice Department and agreed, it was understood, to have further conferences about interpretation of documents in the records of the Bone Committee.

Farish Cites Aid to U. S.

Key witness throughout the three-day hearing was William S. Farish, president of Standard Oil of New Jersey, who insisted through yesterday's session that his company's prewar agreements with I. G. Farbenindustrie had worked to benefit this country's war effort, rather than to impede it as charged earlier by Justice Department witnesses.

Farish and Frank A. Howard, president of Standard Oil Development Co., said that the prewar agreements, formed in 1927 and 1929 and terminated by a consent decree last March, provided principally for Standard's use of I. G. patents in the world outside of Germany.

Under questioning by Committee Counsel Creekmore Fath, Farish denied that the agreements were an attempt to stifle competition, or to make a division of territory. He explained how, since the war, Standard had been following the desire of the Government for complete technical cooperation through industry, by entering pools with other firms for producing many of the war materials which he said Standard had obtained for America through its dealings with I. G. Farbenindustrie. These products included synthetic rubber, and products needed for making synthetic rubber, high-octane gasoline for aviation engines, and products needed for making military explosives, Farish said.

gels daily of all petroleum liquids, representing an increase of 24,300 barrels daily in the California rate as compared with August figures.

The three-man committee, with which Nelson will sit in an advisory capacity, has two problems before it—whether to ration the fuel oil, and if so, to what etent.

While officials in one related agency said there was little doubt that rationing would be necessary to solve the distribution and shortage problem, other officials said they believed voluntary cuts in usage, and widespread conversion of oil burners would provide an answer.

The order prohibiting transportation by tank cars of fuel oils, affected the following States:

Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and North and South Dakota.

A spokesman for the oil coordinator, explaining that, under the order, the additional cars would be placed in service to transport fuel oil to the East, warned that the prohibition, and the re-assigning of cars, does not mean that the East Coast petroleum shortage was licked.

Pettengill Shifted

REAR ADMIRAL PETTENGILL

Vice Admiral Ferdinand L. Reichmuth will succeed Rear Admiral George T. Pettengill September 15 as commandant of the Washington Navy Yard, commander of the Potomac River Command and superintendent of the Naval Gun Factory, the Navy announced yesterday.

Admiral Pettengill will be transferred to duty in the Bureau of Naval Personnel here.

Admiral Reichmuth, 58, who was captain of the yard and assistant superintendent of the gun factory here from May 31, 1938, to June 5, 1940, will resume his permanent rank of rear admiral on assuming his new duties. He has recently been on sea duty as commander of destroyers, Atlantic Fleet.

A native of Beloit, Kans., whose legal residence now is Palo Alto, Calif., Admiral Reichmuth comes to the Navy Yard with a record of 36 years' naval experience, much of it on sea duty.

During the first World War he served on the battleships Oklahoma, which was destroyed at Pearl Harbor, and Michigan and from 1918 to 1920 was on duty here in the Bureau of Ordnance.

Subsequent service included duty as force gunnery officer and aide on the staff of the Pacific Fleet battleship force commander; commander of the U. S. S. Cuyama, commander of destroyer division 30, battle fleet; commander of the U. S. S. Moody, commander of the U. S. S. Chaumont, chief of staff and aide to the commander of battleships, battle force, and commander of the battleship Mississippi.

He holds the Victory Medal, Atlantic Fleet Clasp for service on the Oklahoma during the first World War.

$100,000 Asked In Collision Suit

Damages of $100,000 were asked in a suit filed in District Court yesterday by Robert W. Lassiter of 1027 Ninth Street Northwest for injuries he said he received when a truck and the car in which he was riding collided last November on the Washington-Baltimore Boulevard near the University of Maryland.

Named as defendant was the Horton Motor Lines, Inc., of 1936 Montana Avenue Northeast, operators of the truck.

Lassiter claimed in the petition, which was filed by Attorney Charles H. Quimby, that as a result of the accident he is unable to pursue his occupation.

Axis Will Pay For Atrocities, President Says

that some of the oppressed people were pleading that they be given just one week at the conquerors. But he expressed hope that the judicial processes would be used so that innocent people would not suffer along with the guilty.

The Chief Executive said we had a very good example of the judicial process here two or three weeks ago—an obvious reference to the trial of the eight Nazi saboteurs, six of whom were put to death in the electric chair at the District jail.

Churchill Also Wr.

It was the second ... that President Roosevelt has been aroused to action by Axis atrocities. On October 25 last he vigorously condemned the German 50-for-1 execution of "innocent hostages" in France. He said they were "the acts of desperate men who know in their hearts that they cannot win."

Prime Minister Churchill joined President Roosevelt in his wrath at that time, issuing a statement in which he denounced the "butcheries" in France and said "retribution for these crimes must henceforth take its place among the major purposes of the war."

The President said yesterday that it had been hoped that such atrocities as the shooting of innocent hostages would decline. But on the contrary, he said, they had increased. He mentioned developments in Holland, France and Norway, and said that similar incidents were probable in Poland and Czechoslovakia.

His statement follows:

"The Secretary of State recently forwarded to me a communication signed by the Ambassador of the Netherlands and the Ministers of Yugoslavia and Luxembourg on behalf of the governments of Belgium, Greece, Luxembourg, Norway, the Netherlands, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and the French national committee in London, calling attention to the barbaric crimes against civilian populations which are being committed in occupied countries, particularly on the continent of Europe.

"In this communication, attention was invited to the declaration signed in London on January 13, 1942, by the representatives of nine governments whose countries are under German occupation. This declaration affirmed that acts of violence thus perpetrated against the civilian populations are at variance with accepted ideas concerning acts of war and political offenses as these are understood by civilized nations; stated that the punishment, through the channel of organized justice of those guilty and responsible for these crimes, is one of the principal war aims of the contracting governments; and recorded the determination of the contracting governments in a spirit of international solidarity to see to it that those guilty and responsible, whatever their nationality, are handed over to justice and tried and that the sentences pronounced are carried out.

"The communication which I have just received from the chiefs of mission of the Netherlands, Yugoslavia and Luxembourg states that these acts of oppression and terror have taken proportions and forms giving rise to the fear that as the defeat of the enemy countries approaches, the barbaric and unrelenting character of the occupational regime will become more marked and may even lead to the extermination of certain populations.

"As I stated in October 25, 1941:

'The practice of executing scores of innocent hostages in reprisal for isolated attacks on Germans in countries temporarily under the Nazi heel revolts a world already inured to suffering and brutality. Civilized peoples long ago adopted the basic principle that no man should be punished for the deed of another. Unable to apprehend the persons involved in these attacks the Nazis characteristically slaughter 50 or a hundred innocent persons. Those who would 'collaborate' with Hitler or try to appease him cannot ignore this ghastly warning.

'The Nazis might have learned from the last war the impossibility of breaking men's spirit by terrorism. Instead they develop their 'lebensraum' and 'new order' by depths of frightfulness which even they have never approached before. These are the acts of desperate men who know in their hearts that they cannot win. Frightfulness can never bring peace to Europe. It only sows the seeds of hatred which will one day bring fearful retribution.'

"The Government of the United States has been aware for some time of these crimes. Our Government is constantly receiving additional information from dependable sources and it welcomes reports from any trustworthy source which would assist in keeping our growing fund of information and evidence up to date and reliable.

"The United Nations are going to win this war. When victory has been achieved, it is the purpose of the Government of the United States, as I know it is the purpose of each of the United Nations, to make appropriate use of the information and evidence in respect to these barbaric crimes of the invaders, in Europe and in Asia. It seems only fair that they should have this warning that the time will come when they shall have to stand in courts of law in the very countries which they are now oppressing and answer for their acts."

former commander in chief of the United States Fleet, and an outstanding ordnance and gunnery expert.

Rear Admiral Walton Rit Sexton, retired, former assistant chief of naval operations and commander of the fleet battleships.

Rear Admiral Gilbert J. Rowcliff, an outstanding tactician and gunnery expert. He once headed the department of engineering and aeronautics at the Naval Academy, but has had no aviation assignments afloat.

Capt. Harry L. Pence, retired, who has commanded the cruiser Memphis and a squadron of destroyers. In 1921 he had charge of a dirigible detachment in England, but has had no other air assignments.

Capt. John J. Mahoney, secretary of the board, who has spent much of his service on destroyers, commanding a number of them. He served aboard the aircraft carrier Lexington for about a year in 1935, but has had little or no other aviation experience.

Plays a Vital Role

Although the General Board has no administrative functions, it plays an important role in the determination of fundamental naval policy and in reaching decisions as to the number and types of ships and planes to be constructed. It recommends to the Secretary of the Navy the proportion of aircraft carriers, battleships, cruisers, etc., to be built.

A change in Navy regulations adopted in recent years, Article 403(6), directs that it consider and recommend to the Secretary the general military characteristics of naval aircraft.

The Navy's announcement of the reorganization of the board had this to say:

"The duties and responsibilities of the General Board have increased greatly since America's entry into the war as a belligerent. The wartime reorganization brings to the board a group of outstanding naval officers well qualified through long experience to deal with the vital problems constantly arising under the stress of war . . .

"Importance of the General Board, especially in time of war, is apparent from the nature of its duties. The board studies and recommends naval policy covering a wide range of subjects, including number, type and design of vessels and aircraft, after consideration of all available civil and military information bearing thereon.

"It keeps itself informed on the developing science of warfare, with a view to recommending such changes in the size and constitution of the fleet and of its component parts as may be necessitated by changing conditions."

And "changing conditions" in the "developing science of warfare" have resulted almost entirely from the increasing potence of air power.

2 Wild Bulls Lead Chicago Police On Merry Chase

Chicago, Aug. 21 (INS).—"Two wild bulls are loose," was the alarm that was cried over the police radio today, and the pintos which ride the range in the vicinity of the Chicago stockyards—10 squad cars carrying yip-yipping boys in blue—began to close in.

The two wild bulls dashed into side streets and alleys, and then threw an area of 20 square blocks into uproar.

At one point a child was in their path, and Mrs. Mary Nichols, a housewife, picked it up and tossed it over a fence to safety, but she was knocked down and bruised.

Finally two squad cars closed in and Policemen Edward O'Malley and Walter Miller leaped from their charging machines. But the wild bulls charged, too.

O'Malley was tossed 30 feet; Miller a mere 15.

and say: "That's all you can have—no more," it was pointed out.

Under the plan, priorities would continue to be awarded by the Army and Navy, as well as WPB, but within the strict limits of the master production plan. Since the program would be revamped at least every quarter, the different parts of the program could be kept in gear. WPB would be able to see that proper scheduling of all phases of production is taking place by checking production progress reports regularly and readjusting the program accordingly, it was said.

In operation, it is expected that the plan would involve considerable lopping off of nonessential and incomplete phases of the overall program. Work is being done in WPB to make a test application of the program in the last quarter of this year, provided Nelson gives his approval. Full-scale application of the plan would then be made in the first quarter of 1943.

One feature of this plan is that priorities and the production requirements plan would operate to make it effective. Priorities would be restricted to uses approved under the plan and the production requirements plan would provide a guide to the materials demands of all manufacturers who use up critical materials.

Existence of the plan was learned following reports that Nelson planned to take decisive action on two key fronts—materials and scheduling of production—whether a finish fight with the military was involved or not. Adoption of the plan would involve action in the two fields of materials and schedules.

Labor Action Expected

Labor dissatisfaction with WPB was expected to come to a head Monday when representatives of 18 A. F. L. and C. I. O. unions will meet with WPB officials to discuss production problems.

At least nine labor consultants have already resigned within the last few months either to take other Government jobs or to return to their unions, it was learned. Most recent resignation was that of Richard A. Lester, chief consultant in the WPB labor production division, who has accepted a job with the War Man Power Commission. When questioned by a reporter Lester stated that he had panned to take the job with the Man Power Commission for several months. He added that his resignation has no relationship to current developments at WPB, although he admitted that officials of the labor production division have suffered "considerable depression" lately.

The C. I. O. resolution, which was prepared by the three C. I. O. members of Nelson's unofficial labor policy committee and submitted to C. I. O. executive officers for approval, called attention to impending shutdowns of vital war plants "at the very time when American boys are sacrificing their lives to the cause of freedom on the shores of France and in the Solomon Islands."

Commenting on Libbey's dismissal, the C. I. O. stated that "the only conclusion to be drawn is that Mr. Libbey was fired for telling the truth." Asking that he be reinstated, the C. I. O. stated that "labor has felt that the time for removing the dead wood, the misfits and those who think in terms of competitive business habits and business-as-usual, is long past due."

The resolution added, "The war effort will continue to be impeded if the men who dare to criticize constructively the shortcomings of the war effort are being discharged while those who lack the courage and vision, and who are responsible for the present material shortages, are permitted to remain snugly entrenched in their positions of power an dauthority."

Extortion Letter Writer Sentenced

New York, Aug. 21.—J. Duane Upton, grocery clerk of Erie, Pa., received a suspended sentence and was placed on three years probation today in court on his plea of guilty to an indictment charging him with sending an extortion letter in an effort to obtain handwritten copies of poems by Edna St. Vincent Millay.

Upton admitted he sent a letter last February to Eugene Jan Boissevain, Miss Millay's husband, stating he was conducting an autograph column for a magazine and wanted longhand copies of certain of Miss Millay's poems. Failure to comply with his request, Upton wrote, would compel him to publish a letter which, he said, Miss Millay's sister, Kathleen had sent him.

This letter, Upton informed Boissevain, was to the effect that Kathleen was in danger of starvation.

47-year-old clergyman was remanded into the custody of the marshal.

Molzahn, seated at the counsel table, and his wife, sitting some 15 feet away with a group of friends, both looked tired and drawn after the ordeal of the trial, but neither displayed any emotion at the verdict. When he was led from the courtroom, Molzahn quietly kissed his wife farewell.

The aim of the conspirators was to collect information about the United States Army, Navy, Air Force and defense industries and deliver it to Japan or Germany through Kunze, the Government claimed.

Molzahn's part, the Government charged, was to help Kunze obtain the passport of some neutral country other than the United States.

Trial Near End

Bahr Quizzed On Relations With Gestapo

By the Associated Press

Newark, N. J., Aug. 21.—The Government completed its cross-examination of Herbert Karl Friedrich Bahr in his espionage conspiracy trial today and Bahr's attorney said he would rest his case in "another couple of hours." The trial was recessed until Monday.

Bahr was cross-examined for seven hours on these points:

1. His original meeting with the Gestapo and his relations with that organization in Germany.

2. His part in a plan to "break" a German firm's contract with the General Electric Co. in this country.

3. His knowledge of a steam turbine reportedly being tested in Germany to power airplanes and the source of plans included in a thesis he wrote at Hanover (Germany) Technical Institute for a turbine of advanced design.

He said he was given no instructions for forwarding information to Germany when he left for this country, but that he had been told he would be sent the locations of "mail drops" after he had become established here. He was arrested last month when he arrived at Jersey City on the Drottningholm.

Bahr described briefly 10 days in the Gestapo offices, where he was tutored in the use of invisible ink. He said he underwent Gestapo training and encouraged their agents to believe he would do their bidding in America in order to return to this country.

"I could never get enough money to get back," he said. "I would get a job, and then I would be out of work for a couple of months. I couldn't save any."

He said that during his negotiations with the Nazi agents, he entertained mental reservations not to carry out plans proposed to him.

week or so. When a reporter observed that he had heard the plan would envision the setting up of a "super" board to be known as the economic stabilization board the President merely observed that the story might be wrong.

With Henderson implying that he should have still larger areas of control in order to keep the price picture from getting out of hand, he added that there would soon be a tightening of those controls which he did have. The period of "education" of the public is now "about over" he declared, with strict enforcement expected of ceiling violations. Among the "teeth" in the law is one which permits the person overcharged to sue a retailer for either three times the amount of the overcharge, or $50, whichever is greater.

Coincidentally with the announcement by Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, that he was proposing to enforce a price ceiling on livestock and to rescind the 110 per cent of parity feature in the price law, a powerful ally rallied to the Secretary's standard in James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers Union. After a conference with the President and with Secretary Wickard at the White House, Patton said that farmers "should get parity and no more."

Senator Hugh A. Butler (Republican) of Nebraska meanwhile called on Secretary Wickard to readjust the ceiling on wholesale beef prices "to permit American cattlemen to cover costs and go on producing without going broke."

In his statement to American housewives, Henderson pointed out that the Bureau of Labor Statistics had issued cost of living figures which showed that, between mid-June and mid-July, uncontrolled food prices had advanced 2.5 per cent while those food prices under OPA controls rose only 0.3 per cent. In the same period, prices of all unregulated goods and services advanced 1.6 per cent, while prices of controlled items showed a nominal increase of 0.1 per cent, largely as result of higher prices allowed for gasoline and fuel oil in the East which have later been rescinded.

Roosevelt Cautions Aides On Loose Talk

This situation "is, of course, pounced upon, exploited and intensified by opponents of our war effort," the President said. "In a recent report to me on this situation, Mr. Davis made a statement which should be emphasized: 'The enemy is constantly at work trying to undermine public confidence in the Government; why should members of that Government help him along by undermining it themselves?'"

Almost by way of illustration, President Roosevelt later answered a press conference request for comment on the defeat of his candidate, Senator Mead, at the New York gubernatorial convention, by reading excerpts from an article by Mark Sullivan which appeared in yesterday's editions of The Washington Post and the New York Herald Tribune.

Mark Sullivan's article was devoted to a description of a press conference held by Undersecretary of War Patterson recently. The section read by the President follows:

"When the time for questioning came, it was foreordained that the first would be about the matter most immediately in the news, the commando raid in France the day before, and the American participation in it. The newsmen asked if Mr. Patterson had any comment. The question was asked in a manner which indicated that the questioner really did not have much hope for an answer. By thus setting his expectations below his hopes, he escaped disappointment. Mr. Patterson said merely that he had no worth-while comment.

"If Mr. Patterson has no copyright on those four short words, 'no worth-while comment,' they could be advantageously used by some other Washington officials who face press conferences. (Here the President grinned broadly and went on.)

Effort to Plug "Leaks" Seen

"If all officials were as immune as the impassive Mr. Patterson from feeling that courtesy, or other motive, requires them to satisfy the newsmen with something interesting or amusing—in that event, the quantity of words that go out of Washington would become at once diminished and more informative."

The President's remarks were interpreted in some quarters as an effort to plug "leaks" on partially formed Government plans by officials who have a partisan interest in the success or failure of these plans. It was pointed out that War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson took action on such a "leak" recently when he ordered the dismissal of Frederick I. Libbey, an engineering consultant, after newspaper stories appeared on a report by Libbey which was critical of the iron and steel branch.

"Where honest differences of opinion exist, no one would propose to suppress them," Mr. Roosevelt wrote. "Nor would anyone attempt to interfere with the free use by every public official of the normal processes of information to the public press. But it is no solution to a controverted question to argue it out in public. If the agencies would refrain from resorting to public debate of this kind, they would have a good deal more time to attend to their business, and the Nation would have a good deal more assurances that their business was being done right."

Stalingrad Battle Reaches Crisis

fight for control of both river sides.

The Red armies fighting in the Caucasian foothills south of Krasnodar on the road to the Black Sea port of Novorossiak still were falling back. The Russians were officially reported to have killed more than 2500 Germans before retiring to new positions.

The communique reported the Russians repulsed enemy attacks southeast of Pyatigorsk. There the German drive was along an asphalt road leading to Nalchik, 50 miles beyond. Naichik in turn is only 100 miles west of the Russian oil city of Grozny.

Soviet bombers were engaged in heavy defensive action over this entire area, but also went over to the offensive Thursday night with a long-range bombing of Warsaw in occupied Poland, Eastern Prussia and Upper Silesia.

"A large force" of Soviet bombers "caused 14 big fires in Warsaw, and 19 explosions were observed," an announcement said. Warsaw is more than 700 miles from Moscow, and the Russians said all their planes returned.

Russian dispatches said the Germans were pouring fresh troops, at least two divisions strong, into the critical Don bend area above Stalingrad.

A hot sector of the Caucasian front was south and west of Krasnodar, in the mountain passes approaching the Russian naval station of Novorossisk (no longer used by the Soviet Black Sea fleet).

The Germans were trying desperately to develop a major push. In a two-hour battle, Don and Kuban Cossack warriors cut down several hundred parachutists.

One of these fighters with his four Cossack sons slashed nearly 50 Germans to death.

In continued fighting on the Leningrad front, the Russians were reported to have taken a strongly fortified point on a railway and to have held it after five heavy German counterattacks.

Yesterday was the first anniversary of Hitler's futile siege of Leningrad by 500,000 soldiers, 6000 big guns and 1000 tanks.

Russian Crossing Foiled, Nazis Say

Berlin, Aug. 21 (German Broadcasts Recorded by AP in New York).—Several Russian attempts to cross the Don River have been frustrated, the German high command reported today.

(The Berlin communique gave no details of the attempted river crossings, not even mentioning the sector involved. The report seemingly conflicted with Moscow admissions that the Russians were fighting heavy defensive battles against German forces which crossed the Don west of Stalingrad.)

Axis Agents' Jury Seeks Witnesses

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Federal prosecutors opened a search for new witnesses—whose names were not revealed after examining four persons before the special grand jury on Axis agents yesterday.

The summonses issued for yesterday suggested that the grand jurors were investigating the secret $25,000 paid Representative Hamilton Fish by the Dominican dictator, Gen. Rafael L. Trujillo, in 1939, just before Fish's trip to Germany, where he conferred with Von Ribbentrop, the Nazi foreign minister. Fish claims the $25,000 was given him as an agent, to speculate in oil for Trujillo.

The prosecutors, however, refused to confirm this, although yesterday's grand jury session was important enough for Special Prosecutor William Power Maloney to break off his vacation to hurry here to take part.

Russian Questioned Again

Those questioned by Maloney and Special Prosecutor John T. M. Reddan were:

George Jamhar Djamgaroff, the suave White Russian mystery man who was Trujillo's $50,000 a year agent at the time Fish got the money.

Ray Helgersen, former Washington newspaperman, who was a Dominican press agent in 1938.

Sid Boehm, New York newspaperman, who made an extensive investigation of Axis and bund activities and was a star witness against the Nazi propaganda agency, Transocean News.

A striking brunette girl who spent only a few minutes before the grand jurors and whose name was not given out.

The three men visited the Department of Justice after the grand jurors adjourned, to reconvene on September 16, unless developments require them to be recalled before.

Morals Plot Case Ahead

Besides continuing the investigation now in progress, Maloney and Reddan will be engaged in preparing for the trial of 28 persons indicted last month on charges of conspiring, both before and after Pearl Harbor, to foment disloyalty and mutiny in the armed forces.

Several of these are free on bond, others are in various jails and three are still fugitives. These are William Robert Lyman, official of the National Workers League; Victor Broenstrupp, an attorney for William Dudley Pelley, and Edward James Smythe, a writer for the seditious paper Publicity.

Pelley was brought here Thursday from the Federal Penitentiary at Terre Haute, Ind., where he is serving 15 years for sedition and another conspiracy. When he had pleaded "not guilty" he was ordered taken back to the prison, to his evident disappointment.

As "chief" of the Silver Shirts, which he envisioned as the storm troops who would make him "chief" of this country, Pelley sported a silver-gray goatee. He was still sporting it when he was locked up at Terre Haute last week.

But when two guards led the "chief" into the District Court day before yesterday, his chin was clean shaven.

Telegrams Link Treason Suspects to Nazi Spy

The Federal grand jury in Chicago yesterday completed two days of hearing evidence against confederates of the Nazi spies electrocuted here two weeks ago. Indictments for treason, carrying the death penalty, are sought.

Before the jurors was a file of telegrams exchanged between Chicago and Tokyo last December 7. One of the executed men, Herbert Haupt, Chicago, is alleged to have been in the Japanese capital the day war broke out. He had fled from America to Mexico and eventually reached Germany, where the Nazis decorated him, trained him in sabotage and sent him back with seven others to operate in the United States.

Four Negro porters and two hotel managers from Jacksonville, Fla., were witnesses yesterday. Four of the spies, including Haupt, are believed to have stopped at the hotel after landing from their submarine.

Jailed in Chicago, pending the grand jury enquiry are Haupt's parents, uncle and aunt and two friends of the family.

Navy Also Discloses That Comdr. Hanson Died on War Duty

The death of Commander Malcolm Parker Hanson, 4615 Langdrum Lane, Chevy Chase, Md., previously reported to his family as having occurred in an airplane accident, was stated by the Navy Department yesterday to have been directly connected with a war operation.

HANSON

It was reported in the ninth casualty list issued by the department, in which were included also the names of three men from this area listed as missing.

131 Names Included

The entire list included 131 names, from the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard. "The preponderant share of these casualties," it was stated, "resulted from direct action with the enemy, but included . . . are those who were lost in accidents at sea and in the air on duty directly connected with wartime operations."

Those from this section reported missing were:

Linton Ray Ramsey, boatswain's mate first class, U. S. N., brother-in-law of C. H. Martindale, 1926 Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest.

Commander Hanson was chief radio engineer with Admiral Byrd's expedition in 1928-30 and from 1930 to 1937 was in charge of the radio test laboratory at the Anacostia Naval Air Station. He was awarded the gold medal of the Veteran Wireless Operators Association for his services with the Byrd expedition.

In 1940 he was transferred from active duty in the Bureau of Ships, Navy Department, to duty with the Bureau of Aeronautics. He saw service with the Naval Reserve during World War I and was commissioned an ensign in 1918. His family lives at the Langdrum Lane address.

Sailor's Wife Here

Walstrom, whose wife, Margaret Skillman Walstrom, lives with her sister, Mrs. Claiborn Bagley, at 815 Allison Street Northwest, was last heard from in the Asiatic area. He has been in the Navy for about 13 years and for the past three years had been stationed in Shanghai, which his wife, a War Department employe, was forced to evacuate with others two years ago. He is a native of Randolph, Kans.

WALSTROM

Ramsey was retired in 1930 in Shanghai after 16 years service with the Navy, and established a small business there. He reentered service in 1941 and was last heard from in Manila. He is a native of Ramsey, W. Va., and was stationed in Washington early in his Navy career.

Reuben Schierman, 25, United States Naval Reserve, is a native of Endicott, Wash., and was employed in Woodward & Lothrop's department store as a tailor at the time of his enlistment last year. His wife, Mrs. Ethel Atkinson Schierman, is an employe of the Navy Department.

Casualties reported yesterday were in the period from July 26 to August 12, and include 54 dead; two wounded and 75 missing.

D.C. Firm Awarded Va. Hospital Job

By the Associated Press

The office of Representative Robertson (Democrat) of Virginia said yesterday it was notified by Army engineers that a contract for construction of the Woodrow Wilson Army General Hospital near Staunton, Va., had been awarded the Jefferess-Dyer Co., Washington. Construction will be of brick.

The company's low bid was "between $2,700,000 and $2,800,000," it was said. Bids on permanent type construction, Robertson's office said, averaged only about $500,000 more than for frame construction which led to the decision to adop the permanent type.

ODT Bans Use of Taxis For Sightseeing Tours

The Office of Defense Transportation yesterday decreed that effective September 10, no more motor vehicles using rubber tires may be used for sightseeing tours.

In July ODT forbade all such sightseeing services in buses, including all vehicles with a capacity of 10 or more persons.

It was learned from several cab companies that very few of their cabs realized any profits on sightseeing tours, and that requests for such orders had decreased notably since the outbreak of the war. Around July 22, it was said, some of the companies asked their drivers to cut down on the number of tours of the city to help save gas and tires.

The Blue Light Co., comprising three different groups of cab drivers, said, however, that about 70 per cent of their members, numbering 700, would be greatly affected by the order, for most of their business is that of touring.

An indefinite number of limousine owners will be cut off entirely unless they can turn to carrying defense workers to and from work, it was said. The Atwood Bus Co. has sent all its cars to Camp Pickett, Va., for business with soldiers only. Another, the Orr Lines, transports inspectors and government officials to and from nearby Army camps and proving grounds. One company confines, for the most part, its work to carrying soldiers to and from Fort Belvoir.

Dependents May Get Service Checks Within 2 Weeks

By the Associated Press

Some dependents of service men may receive their first Government allowances within two weeks or less, the War and Navy Departments indicated last night after President Roosevelt signed the bill permitting the allowances to be paid as soon as bookkeeping can be completed.

The War Department said that checks covering the first applications to be approved would go out shortly after September 1, while the Navy said it was "prepared to make payment almost immediately on all applications which have been received and approved."

First Army payments will include all sums accrued up to September 1, and subsequent payments shortly after the first of each month will be made on a similar basis.

Churches Plan United Appeal For Funds

New York—Churches and synagogues of 15 communions and creeds will make a united appeal to their constituencies for the first time in history this coming fall, according to a recent announcement by the Rev. Dr. Earl F. Adams, staff secretary of the Northern Baptist Church.

A committee of leading churchmen has been formed to launch the united canvass under the chairmanship of Charles E. Wilson of New York City, president of the General Electric Co., and a prominent Baptist layman. The committee ent Baptist layman. The committee includes: Henry R. Luce, New York magazine editor; James L. Kraft, Chicago cheese manufacturer; President Charles Seymour of Yale; Charles P. Taft, Cincinnati, now assisting with the war effort in Washington; William Allen White, the Kansas editor; Charles A. Sprague, Governor of Oregon, and Wendell L. Willkie.

The plan calls for all churches in a given community to hold their finance campaigns simultaneously, instead of at different times as is now the practice. Because local custom varies, the canvasses will occur in two periods, with emphasis on the fall period: November 15 to December 6, and February 21 to March 14. Efforts are being made to prevent other appeals from conflicting with church canvasses during these weeks.

The participating churches are: Episcopal, Reformed Church in America, United Brethren, Northern Baptist, Disciples of Christ, Presbyterian, U. S. A., Synagogue Council of America, Congregational-Christian, Church of the Brethren, Methodist, United Presbyterian, Evangelical, Evangelical and Reformed African, Methodist Episcopal, Colored Methodist Episcopal.

Dr. Adams who is acting as executive secretary for the newly-organized united church canvass committee, described the purpose as two-fold: (1) to bring the importance of religion forcefully to the attention of the community (2) to urge individuals to take more active part in church work and to insure adequate financial support through regular giving.

"This plan grew out of a realization of the need for strengthening the spiritual foundations of our country in these war days," he added. "Now, more than ever before, the spiritual forces of America must be effective."

The idea of joint money-raising has been used successfully by churches in several cities. Twenty-eight churches and synagogues in Newton, Mass., joined in a united appeal last fall, with the result that each church achieved greater success than it did the previous year. Similar campaigns have been used in Medina, Ohio, and in Council Bluffs, Iowa. However, the united canvass will be conducted on a Nation-wide basis for the first time this fall.

God Marches With Marines, Private Writes

"It would be a good idea if the world leaders could realize that our God is marching on," wrote a Marine from Quantico Barracks to The Washington Post church editor several days ago. He was Pvt. W. T. Gaines.

"God is here now and working for us now," wrote the leatherneck, "and the world leaders can help conditions along by working with Him."

"History has seen a succession of powers fall to death and decay," he continued. "There was Caesar, the 'Hitler' of his day; there were Pilate and Herod, the rulers of their day. All of these men fell, but the spiritual kingdom remains forever.

"Today we see Hitler in control of territories in Europe and attempting to control the natural life of the people, but he cannot control their spiritual life and some day he will be destroyed just as other men of his type have fallen."

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The precise form of God must be of small importance in comparison with the sublime question, What is infinite Mind or divine Love?" (Page 256)

"SUNSET AND EVENING STAR"
— — — ALFRED TENNYSON — — —
Sunset and ev'ning star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.
But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS
Tennyson never wrote a poem more exquisite or enduring. The tender lines reveal the serene beauty of the sunset of Tennyson's life, a life of sweetness and love, and of firm faith.

Churches Get Plea for Gas, Rubber Saving

Numerous reports indicate churches have already begun economizing in the use of automobile transportation, Director J. Trueman Thompson of the Highway Traffic Advisory Committee to the War Department said today in announcing an invitation to church leaders to support the national program for conservation of vital transportation.

"Uninterrupted church attendance should have a place in the Nation-wide campaign to maintain transportation for war workers and essential civilian needs during the war," he emphasized.

At the suggestion of Samuel McCrea Cavert, secretary of the coordinating committee for wartime service, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Director Thompson has written about 180 local councils of churhes in the major cities of the country, requesting their cooperation in the conservation effort.

"I believe that no pastor will want to withhold the benefits of his advice and observations when this subject comes up for discussion," he added, "and I hope that he will place himself and whatever organized effort may be developed within his church groups at the disposal of the local transportation committee which has been established in most large communities."

A news report from Richmond, V., was cited by Thompson as an example of church cooperation. Motorists driving to services at a local church are requested, according to the report, to display a printed card, "I am going to St. Mark's. Can I give you a ride?"

Randolph Seeks Way to Secure Lanham-Financed Nurseries

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee yesterday began sounding out local school officials and the Federal Works Agency on a plan to provide Washington with a system of public day nurseries financed by Lanham Act funds.

The object of the plan would be to release District mothers for war work, and to provide care for the children of those who are already engaged in the war effort.

The original Lanham Act—authorization for the 32½-million-dollar housing and public works appropriation—provided that part of the money might be used for this purpose. No program has been undertaken, however, because District law forbids the use of public school buildings for any outside activities.

Randolph made no suggestions for overcoming this obstacle but sought the reactions of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools; Corporation Counsel Richmond Keech and Commissioner J. Russell Young. He also asked the Wilson Teachers College, which has been collecting data on the subject, to furnish him with information on the nurseries which would illustrate the need for them.

It is understood that the FWA, with general jurisdiction over the Lanham Act funds, is in favor of the project but can furnish only the money—not the buildings.

Such a system of nursery schools was previously operated by the WPA before the ban on the use of public school buildings went into effect.

"There is a very pressing need for these schools which can be operated for the benefit of District residents without adding to the tax burden," Randolph asserted. "They would enable more women to add their efforts to defense work."

Italians Carry Notes Pleading 'Take Me Prisoner'

Melbourne, Aug. 21 (U.P.).—Australian airmen back from North Africa told today how Italian soldiers approached Australian forces and presented notes inscribed "Take Me Prisoner."

Scores of Italians tried to clamber aboard a Royal Australian Air Force wagon, they said, but there was not room for many, so the Australian driver handed out notes to the rest reading, "This is an Italian prisoner; take him somewhere," and sent them back toward the Allied lines without escort.

Treasury Touch

Beardsley Ruml's plan for putting income-tax payments on a current basis has the virtue of simplicity in addition to other obvious advantages. But the Treasury's tax advisers are not lovers of the simple. On the contrary, they have a positive genius for turning the simple into the complex. Thus after reading the various refinements and reservations accompanying Treasury indorsement of the Ruml plan, the average citizen will begin to wish Mr. Ruml had kept silent. Not only is the modified Treasury plan coupled with a proposal for a 19 per cent withholding tax, but it would prevent taxpayers in the higher income brackets who have suffered sharp declines in income from obtaining the measure of relief which the Ruml plan would have afforded them. Probably Mr. Ruml was too stunned by the intricacies of the Treasury plan to raise any effective objections to it when presented to the Senate Finance Committee. But he reportedly said that he thought all taxpayers should be treated alike, regardless of the amount of surtaxes which they would be required to pay. With that opinion we heartily agree.

Mr. Wickard's Mind

In his Wednesday night radio address Secretary Wickard confessed to a change of mind by urging repeal of the 110 per cent of parity provision of the Price Control Act. A year ago he was advocating inclusion of such a limitation in the then pending price-control bill. One could wish that Mr. Wickard's conversion had come sooner. For it does not seem at all likely that Congress could be induced at this time to revise the Price Control Act so as to eliminate the 110 per cent parity clause and other objectionably restrictive features.

What we are now primarily concerned about is whether action is going to be taken promptly to establish any effective control over prices of farm products and prevent family grocery bills from soaring. The OPA has already been forced to raise price ceilings for canned fruits and vegetables and various processed foods as a result of sharp increases in the prices of uncontrolled farm products. In case of meats and dairy products, prices were well above parity long before the Price Control Act was passed. In July a year ago, for instance, beef cattle stood at 121 per cent of parity, as did lambs. Hogs were then at 107 per cent of parity. In mid-July, 1942, beef cattle reached 131 per cent of parity; lambs, 132 per cent, and hogs, 125 per cent. So far as these particular products are concerned, therefore, it does not at all matter whether the 110 per cent of parity limitation on farm prices remains in the price-control bill.

It is, however, extremely encouraging to hear that Secretary Wickard is willing to have the OPA establish ceiling prices for livestock. The object would be to relieve meat packers who are "squeezed" between rapidly increasing prices for livestock and fixed prices for processed meats. Mr. Wickard admits that the "squeeze has become so tight that there is great danger of wide-open violations of the price ceilings for meats. Unless something is done the whole structure of price control may be jeopardized." Of course, he is right.

Even the setting of ceiling prices for livestock will not prevent meat shortages from developing. For the civilian demand for meat is now greater than the available supplies, in view of the heavy demands for lease-lend purposes and for Army and Navy. But ceiling prices coupled, as Mr. Wickard stipulates, with systematic allocation of meat supplies would keep packing plants in operation, and would make possible more equitable distribution of supplies so that one section of the country would not be experiencing a dearth of meat while another area had an abundance.

The Post pointed out some weeks ago that the failure to fix ceiling prices for cattle and hogs has been the major immediate cause of recent market disturbances. But the basic causes have, as we also said, to be sought elsewhere. The plain fact is that there is not enough meat to satisfy the demands of a civilian population with well-filled pocketbooks. If the regional allocation of meat supplies to distributors and equitable allocation of Government meat purchases among packers fail to produce satisfactory results, the next step undoubtedly will be rationing of consumers. While putting ceilings on livestock prices is not going to increase the supply of meats to consumers, the ceilings do serve to keep the packing industry in full operation as a needed wartime measure and to safeguard the price control structure.

Dieppe To Marshall

The question that will be uppermost in most people's minds as they read the exciting accounts of the supercommando raid is whether the raid established the feasibility of a second front in France. Only the military, of course, can answer that question. And they are not likely to. Still, as he reads the description of the foray, the layman will not be restrained from speculation. It is obvious to him that the raid threw the enemy into the utmost confusion. Hitler did not know whether this was a second front or a fake, but dared not take any chances that it was a fake. The result was that all available strength had to be rushed to the battle front. Now the enemy is in another dilemma: He does not know where the lightning will strike next. Accordingly it may be taken for granted that the Dieppe diversion already has caused the enemy to make new dispositions and to strengthen the coastal defenses from the North Cape to the Bay of Biscay. For so long have we been condemned to fight on Hitler's schedule that we are apt to forget these supreme advantages of the attack. Surprise in this case had psychological as well as tactical advantages. The tremendous hullabaloo which the Nazi propagandists in Germany set up showed pretty plainly that they were badly rattled.

Another plus sign about the Dieppe raid was the tremendous loss that the Luftwaffe sustained. Evidently the Nazis were driven out of the air completely. For the succeeding air raid over France encountered hardly any opposition. This report seems to confirm the suppositions both as to Nazi casualties and as to Nazi air strength in occupied Europe. The casualties were put at 91, with double that number in the "probably" category. If around 275 planes were, indeed, accounted for, then the Nazis must have lost about half of their effective air strength in occupied Europe in that one single air battle. Obviously the Nazis will have to reinforce their occupation forces not only to make up the casualties but also in preparation for repeat performances. We may be sure there will be many of them.

Yet, in spite of this testimony to the success of the supercommando assault, it seems questionable whether a second front can yet be established in France. The return commandos, at any rate, bring back a grim story which gives no ground for confidence. Nazi defenses seem to be extremely formidable. Occupied Europe probably contains 40 divisions, with perhaps three armored divisions, which are mainly concentrated at ports like Dieppe, hedgehog fashion. The mobile forces are at the rear, ready to dash to the scene of action without delay. Nothing that the strategists learned from Dieppe can have failed to change the hitherto prevailing view that any immediate effort to establish a second land front in France would cause frightful slaughter and degenerate into the trench warfare of 1914-1918.

In point of fact, a second front at present in France would not serve what should be the Anglo-American contribution to the 1942 offensive. This, it seems to us, is to try to repair and keep open our lines of communication with Russia. It is our amateur strategical premise that Hitler can be squeezed to death by the man power of the East and the air and machine power of the West in active and continuous exercise. Those who see our new Army licking Hitler's legions on Europe's battlefields—eventually—had better study the supply problem and think of the Nazi success in the Battle of the Atlantic. Our Army is a de luxe Army. For it would take no fewer than 20 of the largest transports to carry over one American division and its equipment. Then another two tons per month per man are scheduled to keep the men supplied. So, if this be accepted as confirming our premise, everything should be subordinated to the maintenance of the direct link with Russia. That link is the Atlantic, whence it breaks into two forks, one around the Arctic Ocean and the other through North Africa. The north fork is now called a graveyard of convoys. It should be mended without delay, and the fact that a Norwegian accompanied Mr. Churchill to Moscow may be an earnest at least of that intent. That means that northern Norway must be wrested from Hitler. As to the Mediterranean, a landing by American troops in North Africa has long been overdue, if only by way of protecting such entrances as Dakar to this continent. Now a landing must be part of a strategical plan to recapture the Mediterranean link with our Eastern Ally. Since a new British command has been set up in Egypt, perhaps there is such a plan, one aimed at moving simultaneously with General Alexander, so as to establish a juncture in course of time. Incidentally, this is the only operation which will permit the establishment of a second front where ideally it should be established, namely, in Italy.

Whether there is any such over-all strategy is impossible to guess from either such diversions as Dieppe or the shapelessness of our war organization. It would seem not. Certainly nothing like it can come out of that facade of strategy called the Combined Staffs Committee. Yesterday we noted that the absence of a master supply plan to direct our resources at Hitler has allowed General Somervell the clear signal to build an American Maginot Line without any competition. But a master supply plan is impossible without an over-all strategical plan. Since the Combined Staffs Committee is a fraud and a delusion, such a plan can be evolved only by the men who are running this war, namely, President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill. Yet they are leaving high strategy to the professionals. Here is another case of decisions falling between two stools—at a time when decisions must be taken on over-all strategy if the United Nations intend to prevent the fulfillment of Hitler's Eastern war.

A generalissimo would fill this vacuum. With him in the role of conductor of war on the Western Front we could expect a direction of the war which would enable this country to throw resources into the fray which are being dammed up inside this country. It is the want of this strategical direction as well as Mr. Nelson's deference to the new isolationists in the Army Services of Supply that is Hitler's only chance of a reprieve.

While Soldiers Fight

If American soldiers and sailors preparing to do battle in the greatest war in history find themselves deprived of a vote in November, they will find Thursday's debate in the Senate very sour reading. That debate clearly disclosed that the soldiers' vote bill is being held up for want of a quorum in the Senate. There is very little leave for the men who are carrying rifles in the hot sun or sweltering in tanks. But the majority of our legislators think it is necessary to escape from even the cool chambers of the Capitol for a period of several weeks while important bills are pending.

Senator Green told a handful of his colleagues that "the time is short to give our service men the chance to exercise the highest privilege of citizenship." He had good reason to complain. His bill to facilitate balloting by mail among service men had been held up last week for want of a quorum and had, to be postponed once more on Thursday because of Senator George's reasonable demand that the Senate "function constitutionally" or not all. Of course, that meant that the Senate could not function at all because only a small minority of its members are in the city.

Yesterday sponsors of the bill agreed to an amendment that satisfies Senator George. He had not opposed the use of absent-voters' ballots by soldiers, but had demanded safeguards to prevent the extension of Federal control over election machinery now regulated by the States. His request was entirely justified, but presented to a chamber of empty benches, it resulted in postponement of action on the bill until Monday. Then it may be blocked again by a quorum demand from some other member. And if the Senate passes the amended measure, it will have to go back to the House, which is also without a quorum. Yes, such laxity in handling a bill to give soldiers a vote will be a souring experience for men who are risking their lives in defense of their country.

Dormitories For Girls

That the Federal Government has an obligation to do more for its low-salaried girl employes than pay them is graphically shown in Labor Department living-cost statistics. Certainly something should be done to reduce larger expense items for single self-supporting women, since more than half of them are reported to be making $1440 or less, though the Labor Department's nominal budget estimates that they need an income of at least $1490 to live here. Plans to build temporary dormitories in walking distance from Government offices that would rent rooms for $4 to $6 a week have been talked about for months, but none has been built. Latest reports indicate that none will be ready before Christmas and then not enough to house more than a small percentage of the girls. Meanwhile turnovers among low-salaried employes are at a peak, and Government bosses must take afternoons off for lack of stenographers. As Mrs. Roosevelt said recently, there is real danger of an epidemic if adequate housing is not soon supplied. If Government agencies are to be able to employ girls well enough fed and clothed to work efficiently, dormitories and more dormitories are needed.

WE WILL KNIT THE STARS

Stay with me tonight, dear; we will watch
The lights of fireflies move slowly
Over the fields; we will listen
To the cricket frogs in the low corners
Of the meadow, and if the wind whispers,
We will hear that too; its sighing is like
That of your breathing close to my ear.
We will make this love of ours secure
As the layers of shale pressed and sealed
For centuries by the strength of rock and earth
Above them. Stay with me tonight, dear,
And we will knit the stars into the sun.

Hot-Water Rations

It was quite a surprise to read this morning your editorial criticizing Mayor LaGuardia's order rationing hot water. If you must object to such action, why not start here at home?

We are tenants in a large apartment development in Virginia, and have had our hot water rationed to us for at least four months. All bathing, washing dishes, etc., must be done during the hours planned by the owner, who lives in a large hotel, and probably has an unlimited supply of hot water.

The tenants have taken this uncomplainingly, just as they put up with less service and maintenance of the buildings, in spite of the fact that the rent paid is supposed to cover all these things.

It comes as a great surprise to find that we are being rationed, while the people in New York apartment houses have been supplied with unlimited hot water. Surely it is no harder to transport fuel oil to Washington than to New York?

Of course, it is unpatriotic to complain too much, but I really believe that some people are taking advantage of war conditions at the expense of the rest of us.

I wonder if all the apartment houses in Washington and Virginia have had hot water rationed. Or have we been duped out here?

Sidewalk Traffic

The "Walk Right" slogan suggested by Harriet Roy certainly should be enforced as rigidly in the City of Washington as the "Drive Right" slogan because a pedestrian's life is in almost as much danger while trying to navigate on the sidewalks of Washington during rush hour (and what hour isn't rush hour in Washington now?) as it used to be in crossing the street. Automobile traffic on our streets now is tame compared to sidewalk movement. I'll take my chances in the street any old time of day or night.

If a pedestrian would walk to the right—our sidewalks are plenty wide—the two lines of traffic via foot would be much more simple and much less dangerous. On rainy days it is worth the danger of taking to the streets rather than risk the danger of having one's eyes poked out.

I'm from a small town myself, but I have always known the correct way to walk down my small-town sidewalk!

Selfish Civilians

Day after day, many officers stand out in the rain and wait for crowded street cars, while civilians go "sailing past with empty seats in autos. I came from the wide open spaces of the Southwest where any civilian who would pass up an Army man would be regarded with suspicion—a possible Nazi. The whole thing is so ridiculously selfish and inefficient in such times as these. Hours of time wasted, nerves frayed and tempers inflamed over a fundamentally simple gesture of common politeness. But I guess that's Washington.

As to check cashing. Few officers can get away, or should, from their offices during banking hours. Few, if any, private business houses will cash an officer's personal check. This, in spite of the fact that a "hot check" officer faces severe court-martial penalty and carries perfect identifications in the form of his A. G. card, with picture. Why shouldn't the Merchants' Association or similar group work out some plan to solve a very tough problem for the officers?

Preliminary Warning

Your editorial in today's Post, "Blackout Questions," is timely. It seems to me an alert signal should be used first, giving 10 or 15 minutes for people to "get set." Even if street and house lights go out immediately, a period of, say, 15 minutes should be allowed for people to get off the street, buses and streetcars to proceed cautiously and in every way facilitate people's getting home. The first signal should be given as soon as planes are sighted to give people a chance to start for home. If the danger is acute the second alarm could follow in three or five minutes. The two-alarm system would also serve to let the people know it was the real thing, and they would get up and go to their blackout rooms instead of calmly lying in bed, as most of us do in practices. "Wolf" should not be cried too often.

Under present arrangements, when the alarm sounds you get out immediately and seek shelter. You knock on a door. Perhaps some timid woman is all alone at home. She naturally doesn't care to let a stranger enter her home, thus exposing herself and her valuables to attack. Even a man, unarmed, would not want to do so.

Courteous Motormen

It has been sad to read of so many adverse criticisms of the bus and trolley-car drivers, I was, therefore, glad to see in your editorial this morning an appreciation of their innumerable tasks.

I am one of the recent arrivals who have had to ask directions going to and returning from many sections of the city. I have had only the most courteous and friendly help, and I am amazed at their patience, for at nearly every stop someone asks the very same questions that I have asked and they have received the same courteous replies that I had received.

It seems to me that a little less criticism and more appreciation of the additional work put on these men by the riders would be a real service in this overtaxed city.

Empty Seats In Congress

Your crusade against our loafing Congressmen and Senators is the only ray of hope the people have that some day in some way we shall be rid of these parasites and that in their now empty seats we shall have honest men who will give their all for the good of their country, men who will work day and night, holidays and Sundays when necessary, as our armed forces are now doing, both here and on foreign shores.

Why should these men in Congress who are there to represent the people ever think of a vacation, or dare to say they need a rest, when our old-line Army and Navy officers are working day and night not only here in Washington but in all parts of the globe. If an officer demanded a rest he would certainly get one—permanently.

Why not have a retiring board of Congress and Senate?

Near-Treason

The strike at the General Cable Co's. plant at Bayonne, N. J., has been reported settled. Yes, it was "settled" in a way that has become all too familiar to us. The Government took over.

The returning workers in this plant (engaged in wartime work) are reported to be now "glad to work for Uncle Sam."

Most people, I think, would be in favor of letting them do just that—furnishing them with a gun and tin hat, or a WAAC uniform. Also, the oath of fealty and pledge of best service to their country should be required.

Nobody seems to know just why or by whom this strike was called. (It is said to have been unauthorized.) None of the workers seems to have taken it seriously. Some pictures of the returning strikers portray a happy-looking crowd that might have been on a lark, or who considered the whole incident as a good joke on somebody.

As stated, this plant was engaged on war contracts and production, and the best that can be said of these irresponsible shirkers (not referring to the racketeer-boss who called them out), is that they did not realize that the interruption of their work on supplies might well spell the difference between life or death of brave boys fighting for them and their country on the far-flung battle fronts of this war.

The Constitution of the United States defines the crime of treason as levying war against them (the United States), or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort." How about that last? Can you not hear Goebbels' cynical laugh when he heard about that strike at Bayonne?

The big question, however, is—What are we going to do about strikes—authorized or unauthorized—in time of war? Must we admit that democracy is a pretty good thing to have and talk about, but isn't at all workable or able to function in a time of crisis or a war against an enemy whose code is work, fight, or be shot. Let's hope.

United Nations' Flag

The Union Jack of Great Britain was hoisted above Dieppe during the attack by commando forces. The sight of it, no doubt, cheered the hearts of Americans, Free French, Canadians as well as the English.

It also gives birth to the thought that the United Nations should have a flag, and that flag should be hoisted above reconquered territory. The nations are united, not alone for the purpose of reclaiming land which has been stolen but also to work in unison for the betterment of peoples who live in those areas.

As an adjunct to the proclamation that the submerged countries must be lifted from the morass into which they have been plunged, it is seemly that a flag should be created which will represent not one rescuing nation, nor any group within the combined forces dedicated to the cause of freedom, but a flag to wave above the whole.

For this purpose I suggest a flag of navy blue. Near the center, a white dove descending to alight upon a V in red—symbolic of the blood which is being shed to preserve the God-given rights of humanity.

Perhaps The Washington Post, always at the fore in such affairs, will ask its readers their opinion of this suggestion, or determine public sentiment in some other manner.

CLAUDE WETMORE.

The Post Impressionist

Omnia Mutantur

All things change! I recall the old lamplighter on his bike. But I have yet to see one driving around in a jeep. I remember when canned goods denoted "ignorance" on the part of the consumer and fondly recollect the homemade ice cream when I was at the well-preserved age of 10 and expected to gain weight.

Those were the awkward times. A button hook was as essential then as a master switch in the basement is now. Fresh air was so plentiful in those days that a couple of ingenious fellows by the name of Wright decided to take to it near Pussy Buzzard, or was it Kitty Hawk? Now look what's happened to the air!

While some things are still sacred to us, many have changed, and undoubtedly some of our old proverbs and familiar sayings will undergo a metamorphosis. Looking ahead, as I have occasionally had to do since I first drove a Model T Ford, I can well understand that if farmers some years back would buy lightning rods by the dozens, sagacious salesmen will eventually sell them miniature antiaircraft guns so they can blaze away at grasshoppers, chinch bugs or other pests.

Although it is still necessary on a piano or typewriter to have two hands making a coordinated effort, some old-fashioned folks still sagely shake their heads and say, "Let not your right hand know what your left hand doeth." This will in the future be, "Don't let your dentist know what the FHA knows."

Some day we'll see old Whistler's mother pushed out of the windows in May and behold a "Mother" by Peter Arno. When that happens, the old "A stitch in time saves nine" will be transformed into "A zipper in the right place prevents double exposure." Likewise nobody will look for needles in the haystack; unfortunates will search for tires in the cupboard.

There will be no moss-gathering, rolling stones. That proverb will be more realistically put this way: "A shifty, rent-owing boarder gets no sugar." And, as with boarders, "Clothes make the man," we will do away with cuffs and trimmings and mumble, "Shorts show up the guy."

Ages ago, perhaps at the old swimming hole, the idea originated that "still water runs deep." Why not modernize it and say, "Beware of X-card holders?" Although I never overheard the conversation, until recently the pot called the kettle black. It was before the exit of something called aluminum. Now we hear the pot calling and getting no reply whatever. But soon we may hear the dress calling the slip "a hoarder."

Yesterday we wondered why some dumbbell put the horse behind the plow. In 1950 we'll laugh (sleeves will be gone by that time) because the farmerette sat in front of the tractor, or because the pilot seated himself under his plane. And while on the subject of the ancient horse, what used to be "Money makes the mare go" may well turn into "Money makes the mayor go."

Rome was not built in a day, and Tokyo was not bombed in over 2000 years. One consolation now is that it is always darkest before dawn. That will still be consoling, in that it will be brightest before a blackout.

Changing horses in the middle of the stream was deemed a bad practice in Lincoln's day. It will be equally ill-advised to change pilots in midair. But that idea is just so much water gone under the bridge, like so many beer-bottle caps gone back to the dealer. But despite the fact that people "never miss the water till the well runs dry," it's not outside the bounds of sobriety to suggest that this may be camouflaged into "You'll never miss your gin till the next war."

A wolf in sheep's clothing is bad, and labeled dangerous. But what about a tank in Cadillac finish? Leaving no stone unturned may graduate to leaving no bomb unused. So . . . since only very few people still make hay while the sun shines, why can't they buy bonds while they're still around?

Stranded sailors and aviators, once they reach a tropical shore, will come back with a new one. First it was, "Water, water everywhere, and not a drop to drink." They'll declare, "Monkeys, monkeys everywhere, and no monkey business."

Only a chosen few ever knew that "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." Many chaps will say from experience that uneasy sleeps the guy that wears a helmet. All of which leads up to the undeniable conclusion that even a cat, with invincible determination, may look at a king. That's long been changed to "A regular fella may look at a third-termer."

Local Problem

It is unreasonable for you to concern yourself with the New York situation when some apartment houses right here in the District have notified their tenants that hot water would be available only at certain hours. For example, in my house we have been warned to expect such service only between the hours of 7 and 9 in the morning and 7 and 9 in the evening. It seems to me that the "Little Flower" has been much more thoughtful in his timing!

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Axis Peace-Feelers

SOME TURKISH journalists who have recently been in Germany have come back home with the story that at the end of this summer's campaign in Europe, the Nazis would like to stop the fighting and to start negotiating with Britain and America. Similar stories have been circulating for some time and there can be little doubt that there are Nazis who are exploring the idea of a grand essay in multiple treachery by which Germany would offer to abandon Japan if the Allies would abandon Russia and the peoples of Europe.

LIPPMANN

The advantages which the Nazis would like to gain by putting out this idea are obvious. If they could make it appear that the Americans and the British were in any degree tempted, their agents would immediately approach the Russians and seek to restore in a new form the Hitler-Stalin pact of August 1939. At the same time they would tell the Japanese that if they could get Russia temporarily out of the war, and if they could get a truce in Western Europe, Japan would gain enormously. For, if the British and Americans could be persuaded to let down their guard in the west, and could be induced to move large forces from Europe to the Pacific, Hitler could at the right moment break the truce, knock out Britain, paralyze the United States, and thus make certain a Japanese victory.

A GRAND MANEUVER, based on the same fundamental pattern, did work in the year between Munich and the outbreak of the war. The connection with Russia was broken at Munich, Russia was neutralized in August 1939, Japan's alliance with Hitler was kept dark, Britain and France were isolated, and American pacifism was encouraged. It is most probable, therefore, that there are Nazis who are wondering whether this huge success cannot be repeated in a new form. In war, in business, and in crime there is a strong tendency in all men to keep using the pattern which once worked successfully.

There are, however, invincible reasons why the same grandiose maneuvers cannot be repeated now. The good faith of the pledges which the United Nations have given one another is guaranteed by the objective situation. Once that objective situation is truly understood, the impossibility of a negotiated truce by Britain and America is self-evident.

THE BASIC FACT in the situation is that Germany and Japan on the one hand, Great Britain and the United States on the other, are now irretrievably committed to a total mobilization for war. No truce is conceivable under these conditions because no country could demobilize and return to a civilian economy. If our enemies demobilized, the occupied countries would explode in their faces. If we demobilized and relaxed even a little, the British Isles would lie open to an annihilating surprise attack, and we should lie open to Pearl Harbors in all our far-flung defenses.

A stalemate truce is a technical impossibility in a total war. Even if it were theoretically possible to cease firing, neither side could cease to stand at alert, neither could demobilize its men, neither could reconvert its industry to civilian use. For the side that relaxed even a little would at once be mortally vulnerable. The tension of standing fully mobilized indefinitely and forever alert would be unbearable. The strain would be greater than the strain of war itself: the waiting would be harder than acting: the costs would be greater because there could never be any end to them until, by lightning strokes, the truce was broken and the war started again.

IT IS POSSIBLE that many Americans would not have understood this if it had not been for the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. But now they have to understand it. For Pearl Harbor proved beyond any argument that if our enemies retain the power to deliver lightning strokes at our vital defenses, they will deliver the lightning strokes at some moment when we are not perfectly ready for them.

What we learned at Pearl Harbor, the Russians learned in June 1941, and all our other allies in the successive lightning strokes since the seizure of Austria.

THE IDEA of ending wars without a complete military decision belongs to the age of wars fought by nations living within the same moral order. Excepting only the Napoleonic wars which were total wars like this one, the wars within Christendom were conducted by governments which recognized the same customs and the same codes of honor in warfare. They were fought for limited purposes, to gain territory, to settle disputes. They were not wars of annihilation and of absolute domination.

The wars of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and the small wars of the nineteenth century, did not begin with attempts to annihilate by surprise, and they were waged for disputed but definite aims, and they ended, therefore, in a truce and negotiation. This is not that kind of war. A war which began without notice on Sunday morning in Pearl Harbor cannot end until the power to start such a war has been destroyed. For if it ended sooner, the repetition of Pearl Harbor would be so certain that the task of being always prepared for Pearl Harbor would mean the endless militarization of the country.

THERE IS no use, therefore, in our enemies concocting offers of a truce. For they are bound to be met by the question that the enemy governments can never answer: how do you intend to convince us that you are not Mr. Kurusu, repeating himself, and that you are not preparing another Pearl Harbor while we talk with you?

Canadian Munitions

By Janet R. Keith

Delivered When Due

IF THE Russians are able to stem the tide of battle, some credit will be due to Canadian munitions. Every tank and every piece of equipment promised by Canada to Russia has been shipped on its due date. Canadian-made Valentine tanks are reaching the Russian front in ever-increasing numbers. Loaded with ammunition and gasoline, many of them are in action 40 minutes after they are unloaded from the train.

This information was revealed recently in London by G. K. Shiels, Deputy Minister of Munitions and Supply for Canada. He is in Britain to confer with officials about keeping Canada's rapidly growing war production on the right track. During the course of his conferences, many another interesting fact about Canada's industrial war effort will probably come to light, for the story of Canadian production since 1939 is an amazing one.

Airplanes, for instance, were made in Canada at the rate of less than 40 a year before the war. The entire industry employed about 1000 people. Today 400 planes a month are rolling off Canadian assembly lines, and 50,000 men and women are working at aircraft production. Canada is looking after most of the requirements of the Dominion Air Training Plan, is building operational planes for the R. C. A. F., and has accepted large orders for training and service planes from England and the United States.

Nine Types of Planes

Nine types of planes are in production: an elementary trainer, the Fairchild Cornell; a single-engined advanced trainer, the North American Harvard; a twin-engined advanced trainer, the Canadian Anson; a twin-engined reconnaissance bomber, the Bristol Bolingbroke; a reconnaissance amphibian, the PBY5 Catalina; a single-engined fighter, the Hurricane; a twin-engined fighter; a four-engined long-range bomber, the Avro Lancaster, and a navy dive-bomber, the Curtiss Hell Diver. All plane engines are imported. Otherwise, except for certain instruments, Canadian planes are Canadian-made.

Over a million shells a month are being turned out by 40 Canadian plants. Aside from expenditure of private capital, the Dominion has spent 100 million dollars in constructing plants for the production of ammunition, bombs and mines. Production of shells comprises 21 types of 14 different calibers, ranging from 37 millimeter armor-piercing shot to the 7.2-inch size. Canada also holds an enviable position in the field of small-arms production, where output runs to more than a billion rounds a year.

More than a quarter of a million automotive vehicles have been produced in Canada and shipped abroad for service since the start of the war. The Canadian automobile industry builds more than 100 types of military vehicles. Important among these is the Universal carrier, a baby tank which travels at 45 miles an hour on caterpillar tracks and is equipped with machine guns. A single Canadian plant turns out enough of these in a day to equip a battalion.

The Ram and the Valentine are the two tanks being produced in Canada. The Valentine, which is being shipped to Russia in quantity, is a medium light tank, Diesel motored. "As big as the living room in an ordinary home, it is able to travel at nearly 20 miles an hour, climb steep ascents, ford streams, and rip through barbed wire entanglements."

Hangars and Airports Built

Among the big construction projects undertaken have been hangars and airports for the Joint Air Training Plan and the R. C. A. F. hangars built since the start of the war would equal a single building 20 miles in length; completed airfields cover an area of 115 square miles.

In six month Canada now turns out more military explosives than she did from 1914 to 1918. A single ammunition-filling plant occupies 450 separate buildings scattered over an area of more than 500 acres. Every plant listed on the original program is exceeding by far its planned capacity.

Administering this vast productive program is the Department of Munitions and Supply, which came into operation in April, 1940. This powerful department has two main functions: making of all war purchases and mobilization of industry and resources to meet war needs. Controllers, who are virtually managers of the industries they direct, have been appointed from time to time as more and more goods have been diverted to war needs and shortages of supplies have developed. A controller has power to purchase, expropriate, manufacture, and take virtually any step required to further the war effort in his own field. Among the 13 appointed to date are an oil controller, a timber controller, a steel controller, a transit controller, an aircraft controller.

Every controller upon his appointment automatically becomes a member of the Wartime Industries Control Board, which is responsible for the supply and allocation of all materials essential for war needs. This board works in close cooperation with the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, which has supreme authority in the field of price control. The chairman of each board is a member of the other board.

Most interesting of the methods used by the department to obtain the required production are the Crown companies. These companies were incorporated by the government to surmount certain special problems of production, supply and administration. They operate directly under the Department of Munitions and Supply, and their accounts are audited by the auditor general of Canada. To date 21 of these companies have been formed.

Allied War Supplies Corporation administers on behalf of the Canadian and British governments the explosives, chemical and ammunition-filling plants which are owned and financed by the government. Citadel Merchandising Limited coordinates the production and procurement of new and used machine tools for war needs.

Fairmont Co. Limited purchases, stores and sells new and scrap rubber for war industries, while Polymer Corporation Limited is building plants for the manufacture of synthetic rubber by "polymerization."

The Canadian Anson, a twin-engined advanced trainer, is in full mass production under the administration of Federal Aircraft Limited. Nearly 13,000 houses for warworkers have been constructed by Wartime Housing Limited. Other companies have control of airplane spruce, alloy steel, wool, cargo vessels, silk, metallic magnesium.

Whatever her other shortcomings, Canada, a country of 11,500,000 people, can compare her war-production record proudly with that of any other country in the world.

Brazil And War

By Virginia Prewett

Nazi Courtship Proves Useless

AS WAR CLOUDS close down on Brazil, every anti-Axis nation in the world will look anxiously toward this protector of South America's strategic bulge with one thought in mind—how will Brazil meet war?

The answer to the question of what Brazil will do can be judged only on the record of what she has been doing. This story for years now shows that while Germany in Europe and Japan in the East were incubating their respective drives for military conquest, this richest of all the South American prizes that they have been planning to lay their hands on has also been working on a plan, one that they thought up themselves as their version of what they want their national future to be. It happens to be diametrically opposed to the Axis scheme, since the one purpose that runs through it is a stronger, more unified, more independent Brazil.

No country has been more ardently courted by Germany than Brazil. In 1934 Brazil accepted the tempting offer of one of the Nazis' fancy trade arrangements. It took her only four years to find out that its results were a negative trade balance with Germany where a positive one had been and a German-dominated instead of a Brazilian-owned importing system for many essential products.

Brazil Guards Her Independence

As time has showed more clearly that Germany's ultimate aim is economic domination of the Western world, Brazil has quietly taken one step after another to show that in the future she is looking to her economic eggs will be squarely in a free Western Hemisphere basket. She has done this by consciously developing her national production to fill the needs of hemisphere markets.

Brazil has actually been at work for years now on her plans for her stronger, more independent future. What it adds up to is that while a war was brewing that would hit Brazil with a strong impact, Brazil has been preparing to meet it and to hit back. This preparation has three aspects—the political, economic and military—and has been speeded up with the approach of the show-down.

The basic one, the political, developed first. Brazil's greatest national curse has always been the political disunity that grows out of sectionalism. Her vast size and lack of communications have been chief contributing causes to this. In her modern history, three states—Minas Geraes, Rio Grande do Sul and Sao Paulo—have dominated. For many years before the coffee crash in 1930, Brazil's national life had been ruled almost exclusively by rich and energetic Sao Paulo, center of coffee growing.

In 1930, for the first time, a national leadership arose to militate for the idea that Brazil should be governed for all Brazil, for the far south, the neglected Amazon and the desert regions of the bulge as well as for the advanced and populous Sao Paulo. Getulio Vargas, backed by Brazil's army, rode into control on this program. One of the first acts of his administration was to burn the state flags, to symbolize Brazil's new drive for unity as a nation.

Two Internal Tests Withstood

His regime has stood two sharp internal tests. In 1932 Sao Paulo staged an unsuccessful revolt. A darker threat later appeared when the Integralists, a Fascist-inspired group, tried to swing a large Brazilian element over to the ideology that Nazi agents were feverishly cultivating among Brazil's large German population. Master politician Getulio Vargas stayed on easy terms with the leader of this movement, Plinio Salgado. When Salgado in 1937 planned a coup to set up his pro-Fascist dictatorship, Vargas, informed in advance, quietly closed down on the ringleaders. He then himself assumed dictatorial powers and continued with the program he had started.

The main points of the Vargas regime's economic plan are two. First, they have stimulated the production of other agricultural crops than coffee, to broaden Brazil's exports from coffee. Second, they have set on foot a broad program to stimulate national manufactures and relieve Brazil's dependence on foreign imports.

In the face of war, Brazil has speeded both these plans. Long before Pearl Harbor she had begun to emphasize the production of tropical oils and fibers and to make plans to increase rubber production. These products are now helping to fill needs made acute by our losses in the Pacific. It happens that they come from regions that had been almost entirely neglected by the central government till Vargas came to power. These are the Amazon Valley and the strategic Brazilian bulge region. Humming activity there now makes it difficult for Axis agents to foster disunion.

Industrial Expansion Great

Brazil's industrial expansion since 1930 has been greater than that of any country in the world except Russia. She mainly produces articles of prime necessity, every one of which is today a weapon against the Axis tactics of cutting her lines of supply.

Flourishing crops, busy mines, spinning factory wheels all over Brazil mean momentum with which the nation can meet the crisis of war. One of the chief means through which this internal development has been encouraged has been a vigorous attack on Brazil's pressing problem of communications. The results here again add up to definite assets in the face of war.

The Vargas plan has been to connect laterally the regional rail systems that run from major cities and producing centers to ports. A great north-south trunk road has been started to connect the busy, prosperous south with the distant northeast. At the same time, within the most neglected areas, regional communications were improved. In the Amazon Valley this has meant forming a government-subsidized company to overhaul the dilapidated river shipping line. In the bulge region, it has meant building roads to connect interior towns. An extensive system of dams and reservoirs built to combat the droughts that occur there periodically add greatly to this vast area's political and economic stability.

If an actual invasion is attempted through the bulge, this system of roads and reservoirs will prove of great military value to the defending army. The great trunk road that will connect this region with producing centers a thousand miles to the south is well under way. Work is being rushed from both ends.

Another part of the Vargas plan of national improvement that will prove an important war asset is the emphasis that has been placed on aviation during recent years. At the outbreak of the Second World War, Brazil ranked as the sixth commercial air nation. This development has given her hundreds of airports strung from one end of the country to the other. They are especially numerous in the bulge region. The great airports that Pan American Airways has built from Miami to Natal for the ferry service to Africa provide a route over which we can rush air reinforcements to her if an attack materializes from Dakar. The numerous airports that dot the vast wild bulge area provide bases for an air defense in depth that could make it very tough for an invading force.

Brazil has had compulsory military service for years and started expending her army and navy to the limit of her economic capacity in the middle thirties. To meet a German attack in force, she would have to have men and material from us, just as they have been needed on every world battlefield. To go into war and to stay in, she will have to continue to get certain essential supplies from us. This, however, comes under the head of our job, not Brazil's.

Thermometers And Oil

Ration coupons for furnace oil are being discussed at Washington. And, according to announcements, your quota may be based on the temperature in your particular community. This ought to make the oil rationing system more fun than anything so far attempted.

• • • •

We await the appointment of a Secretary of Community Temperatures. Also a TRA: Thermometer Reading Administrator.

• • • •

Boy, is there chance for confusion and what not there! Can you hear the squawks from Bill Jones who can't get oil for his house on the exposed heights of Magnolia Acres when he hears that Seth Brown, who lives in the valley only a half mile away, has got his tank filled on the ground the temperature is lower there!

• • • •

And can't you hear the bellowing from Geranium Manor, Connecticut, over a Federal ruling that it is colder in Hollyhock Hills, just over the New York lines 15 miles away!

• • • •

Who is going to be the Grand Imperial Judge of Temperatures in All Communities? What department in Washington will handle the job of officially taking a Gallup Poll of Sectional Chilliness?

• • • •

Suppose Harold Ickes rules that Cos Cob is colder than Westport and Mr. Henderson says, "Nonesense! Westport makes Cos Cob seem a summer resort!"

• • • •

Will a frozen pipe in Simsby Center entitle a man to no consideration at all while a frost on the window panes in Coopers Creek in the next county mean a speedy Federal dispensation?

• • • •

Can the oil man pour 300 gallons into Joe Doake's tank at Spifftown Center, ignoring the call from Will Spelvin at Screwball Corners, and justify it by the mere statement, "Doakes had a good thermometer. Spelvin's was out of order."

• • • •

Will a Republican town have any chance of getting oil ahead of a Democratic town, with Democrats reading the temperatures?

• • • •

"Why can't I get some oil?" We can imagine Elmer Twitchell yelling into the phone.

"What's the situation?" we can hear the oil man answer.

"I'm frozen stiff. My furnace is out, the house is like a barn and I think I have pneumonia."

"Don't be silly. It isn't cold where you are."

"It isn't?"

"Of course not. I've got it officially from the Federal Controller of Temperature Readings."

Stews a la Muse.

Oh, the ancient Greeks provided us Muses
To aid in igniting artistic fuses,
But would they had fashioned a muse unnapping,
Whom I could consult in my menu mapping!
For, if ever a gal needed inspiration,
Direct from Olympian elevation,
It's I, as I cower, blank and meek,
Confronted by dinner lists for the week.

• • • •

With eyes a-glaze and mind dead numb,
I stare at pen and paper
And wonder if I'd best succumb
To Sauce Bernaise, or Caper,
And ponder if Tripe Lyonnaise
Would bring desired relief
From endlessly unbroken days
Of chicken and of beef.

• • • •

Oh, help for the one whose lot is to plan
The food to keep breath of life in man!
Oh, mercy on her, who must daily waver
'Twixt budget, meals and the cook's disfavor!
O, Science, whose blessings are widely strewn,
Crash through with the housewife's longed-for boon
And hasten the day when she'll serve, all sparsely,
A vitamin pill, complete with parsley!

There is now both a meat and a rubber shortage, and what squawking. Squawking Seth, who eats in a lot of second string restaurants, wants to know is how you tell the difference?

Ima Dodo by the way is always cooperating. Yesterday to save oil she told the waiter not to put oil on her salad, but just use coal instead.

Garble Sisters are still getting things all mixed up. They have wired the furnace for sound, put a coal grate in the icebox and had the radio converted so it will burn coal and wood.

Our Indians At War

Eager And Willing To Serve America

THE DESCENDANTS of America's original inhabitants are playing their full part in the effort to keep America free. Of the 60,000 Indian males in the United States and Alaska between the ages of 21 and 44, approximately 8000 are serving in the American Army. This exceeds the percentage of participation by the male population as a whole within those age groups.

At few places have Indians refused to fight for the Flag that waves over the land their forefathers owned. At the Fort Peck reservation in Montana, for example, of 252 braves registered under the Selective Service Law 131 have volunteered for Army duty. Similar records have been made at other Indian agencies.

This is particularly significant, for this is the first war in history in which Indians have been required to serve in the country's armed forces as an obligation of citizenship. Not until 1924 did Congress make all Indians within the United States and possessions full-fledged citizens. This act was largely a reward for the splendid voluntary part played by Indians in rallying to the colors in 1917 and 1918.

Indians Are Enlisting

Wholehearted participation by American Indians in the building of America's Army also derives considerable significance from the fact that for years Nazi propaganda has endeavored to drive a wedge between white man and red man in this country. Typical Silver Shirt utterances told the Indians that only under Nazism could they get their lands back and have complete justice. Broadcasts from Berlin predicted an Indian uprising in the United States.

The Indians of the United States have answered this propaganda by enlisting in large numbers in the United States Army. The braves who registered on the Navajo reservation brought along their guns. They wanted to start fighting the enemy at once. The Office of Indian Affairs of the Department of the Interior reports that approximately 500 Indians are entering the Army every month. One tribe deferred a long series of legal claims against the Government when it learned that the Government was engaged in war. Winning the war came first, the chiefs said.

Many observers believe that these events will have important repercussions in other nations. Native populations in South America, India, Egypt and the Near East have often expressed a strong bond of sympathy and kinship with the Indians of North America. The fact that those Indians are now enlisting in the Army of the United States may strengthen American ties with nations that have large native segments.

Symbol to Natives Elsewhere

John Collier, United States commissioner of Indian affairs, recently pointed out that the American Indians are an important symbol to colonial peoples all over the world. When the Arabs wanted American engineers to improve their rail roads and irrigation systems, they asked for engineers from the Office of Indian Affairs. After a large magazine in this country had published an article about distressing conditions among certain Indian tribes the people of India conducted special prayers in behalf of the Indians in far-off America.

Mr. Collier, long a champion of extended rights and privileges for the American Indian, believes that the present wholehearted participation in this way by our Indian tribes will have advantageous effects in Egypt, India, the Near East and South America. The Office of War Information, using radio and printed pamphlets, plans to inform the men and women of these nations of the Army enlistments by thousands of Indians in such States as Oklahoma, Montana, Idaho, California, Arizona and Oregon.

Several prominent members of Congress have maintained that the Indians' eagerness to serve in the Army is a tribute to the patriotism and spirit of America's original inhabitants. "It is a grand show of loyalty," said Senator Charles L. McNary of Oregon. "After the injustices the Indian has suffered," declared Representative John M. Coffee of Washington, "he still is ready to fight for America, because he knows that only under democracy can injustices be remedied. Under Fascism and Naziism the Indian would be crushed along with all other lovers of liberty."

Statistics compiled by the Office of Indian Affairs indicate that practically all Indians of eligible age have registered for Selective Service. Registration among Indians is more than 99 per cent complete. When a group of young Sioux, whose grandfathers fought Custer at Little Big Horn, heard of the Selective Service registration, they snorted derisively, "Since when," asked one of them, "has it been necessary to conscript the Sioux as fighters?"

Tribes Pledge Loyalty

Scores of Indian tribers have specifically pledged their loyalty. The Chippewa Indians of Michigan formally declared war on the Axis, announcing their determination to "stand by Uncle Sam to the end." Indians and Eskimos in Alaska are making fur boots, parkas and mittens for American soldiers. Some of these soldiers are men of their own tribe. On the swift waters of the Columbia River Indian fishermen are setting aside funds from part of their catch of salmon for young members of the tribe who have entered the Army.

The value of American Indians to the Army is underscored by certain special skills to which the Indians claim heritage. As scouts, runners and in signal work, they excel. They can slip silently and swiftly through the wilderness which the Army must defend in the Far West and in Alaska. The activities of the famous Indian scouts, last of their line, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., has called the attention of the Nation to the role of Indians in the work of the Army.

In this first war in which the American Army has officially had a claim on the service of America's Indians, that service is being given in full measure. Indian enlistments indicate that they are playing even a larger proportionate part than the rest of the male population. Nor is this spirit confined exclusively to American Indians and natives. When registration for the draft took place in Alaska, several Eskimos from Big Diomede Island, which is in the Soviet Union, were on hand to register with their American brothers from Little Diomede. When Selective Service officials found out the place of residence of the visitors, they gently explained to them that their place was in the Russian army rather than the Army of the United States.

Women to Get Jobs In Old Iron Plant

Sunnyvale, Calif., Aug. 21 (INS).—Joshua Hendy Iron Works, sprawled among the pear orchards of Sunnyvale and throbbing with the engines of war, announced tonight that women soon will enter the shops and foundries of this almost century-old man's domain.

Tooling to start production of steam-turbines soon, the company is prepared to use from 300 to 500 women on the production lathes which will turn out such parts as turbine blades in vast quantity.

Will Written Under Fire In Philippines Puzzles Court

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

White Plains, N. Y., Aug. 21.—The Surrogate's Court yesterday advised William A. Coffey, attorney, of Mount Vernon, to consult the law of the Philippines for guidance in determining the validity of the holograph will of Capt. Lamont T. Clark of the United States Army Engineer Corps, written while under fire in the Philippines.

Coffey received the will in the mail, as part of a letter. Captain Clark has not been heard from since the fall of Bataan, nor has there been any word from his wife, who was in Manila when the Japanese struck. The letter was dated "in the middle of things, March 6, 1942." It said that he feared his wife was dead and wished to make new provisions to dispose of his estate of $80,000.

"I don't know if foregoing is legal, but it is the best I can do," he wrote. "We are in a jungle and no notaries public, lawyers or documentary stamps are available."

Coffey submitted the document to the Surrogate's Court for an advisory ruling as to its validity.

Under the law at the time the will was written, a will must have two witnesses to be probated in New York State. Captain Clark's document bore the signature of one witness, John Delaney. Last May 6 the Legislature adopted an amendment to the decedent estate law providing that a holograph will may be probated without attesting witnesses if the handwriting is proven to be that of the testator.

Jap Treachery Nothing New, Officer's 1853 Journal Reveals

They were ever thus, those Japs. The murder they could do behind a smile was mayhem at best even in 1853 and sickened an American naval officer who's reaction to treachery made-in-Japan he contemporaneously listed in a journal of adventurous travel brought to The Post yesterday by a Washington book collector.

The officer, Purser George H. Ritchie of the U. S. S. John P. Kennedy, one of five vessels dispatched from America 98 years ago to make a survey of Far Eastern waters for commercial and naval reasons, encountered the Ainos, hairy men of the isles to the north of Japan. Ritchie learned about Japs from them.

On the journal page dated "Yesso, West Coast," he aserts:

"These people (Ainos) were the original inhabitants of this island and for many years were at war with the Japanese. Finding these people holding out bravely, the Japanese determined to subdue them by treachery.

Peace Proposed

Proposals for peace were made which being accepted, they caused a very large building to be erected and a banquet prepared. The Ainos were then invited to celebrate the cessation of hostilities, and when all their warriors and chief men were assembled they were set upon and murdered. These poor devils now are slaves to their enemies."

The journal containing that tidbit of Nineteenth Century Jap ethics is in remarkable repair. It was written in 1853. Its owner now is Nathan N. Wallack, 3933 Military Road Northwest.

The Japs also liked a touch, literally, of warlike symbolism in their eating, Ritchie found while excursioning ashore. "When they salute you, it is with a low obeisance, then stroking their beards. When one of their number is presented with a bowl of food it is always accompanied by a sword-shaped stick with which to raise the mustache when eating."

Strangers Well Treated

But, meanwhile, strangers appeared to have been well treated. The Navy callers were amply supplied with fuel wood and water and any attempts to compensate were resisted, on pain, the chieftains said, of being beheaded. The native food, in one instance and that a ceremonial occasion, was described as soup, crawfish, eggs, potatoes and sakki, the latter served warm and cold.

The purser paused here a moment, to elaborate! "The beverage is a kind of fermented liquor prepared from rice. It is tolerably bright and bears some resemblance to wine, though its taste is somewhat singular and not very palatable. When fresh it is whitish, but afterwards acquires a brown color from lying in wooden casks. It is generally drunk warm, and when taken in any quantity soon heats and inebriates; but its effects are dispelled in a short time and generally succeeded by a disagreeable headache."

Like the Chinese, Ritchie recorded, the Japs used chop sticks. The sakki was drunk out of shallow saucers and very small porcelain cups, he stated.

Love was a shy prospect there. The children greeted the Americans warmly with "o-h-i-o," signifying "how do ye do?" Ritchie wrote. The old folks were the same. But "only the young girls, who are budding into womanhood, would run at our approach, this being, I imagine, a part of their education."

Bishop of Buenos Aires To Arrive Soon

Due to arrive in this country momentarily is Msgr. Miguel D'Andrea, Auxiliary Bishop of Buenos Aires. One of the most distinguished prelates in South America—and a great orator—Monsignor D'Andrea is scheduled to be here by Monday for the opening of the Inter-American Seminar on Social Studies, sponsored by the National Catholic Welfare Council.

Monsignor D'Andrea has had an unusual career as a prelate. At one time he served as his country's Ambassador to Peru heading a special mission. Although women play a predominant part in charity organizations in the Argentine, Monsignor D'Andrea has been the leading light in Societad de Beneficia, the largest charity organization in Argentina.

The Seminar on Social Studies will last a week here and they will then hold sessions at Notre Dame in Indiana, Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, New York and will wind up back here on September 12.

Lyon–Taylor Troth Told

Mr. and Mrs. Moncure Nelson Lyon of Black Oak Ridge in Purcellville, Va., announce the engagement of his daughter Miss Mary Owen Lyon to Hobart Chatfield-Taylor, son of the Undersecretary of Commerce and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor.

Miss Lyon graduated from the Sacred Heart Convent in Noroton, Conn., and was presented to Virginia society at a ball given by her parents at their home in August, 1937, and at the Bachelors' Cotillion in Baltimore that winter.

Her mother is Mrs. Robert Longden Bentley of Rokeby, near Pikesville, Md., and she is one of four sisters, Mrs. Ferdenand Chartard 4th, Mrs. J. Glenn Whitman and Miss Betty Lyon. The prospective bridegroom was graduated from St. Mark's School and from Yale University where he was a member of the Fence Club. He is a member of the U. S. Coast Guard and is stationed at Charleston, S. C. The wedding will take place in October at the Lyon home in Virginia.

Istomin Painting To Be Sold for Russian Benefit

Russian art for the sake of Russia is the theory back of the exhibition and sale of "Black Sea," an original oil painting by Istomin now being held at the Russian Relief Headquarters on Connecticut Avenue.

The painting, donated by Edwin S. Smith of Washington, is the first oil, executed by a Russian on Russian soil, to be displayed at the organization's headquarters. Proceeds from its sale for $150 will be used for aid to the country it so aptly depicts.

Istomin, a director of the Moscow Academy of Art, is one of his country's leading exponents of the monumentalist movement, a mode of artistic expression that has been largely identified with art in the U. S. S. R. Born in 1887, his earlier work was done in the field of interior decorative art, but later transferred his talents to the realm of landscape and portrait painting. His "Black Sea" canvas is distinctive for its heavy brush stroke technique and bold use of color that is characteristic of the monumentalist school.

Gives Up Horses; Joins the Forces

Giving up horses for the duration—unless perchance he lands in what's left of the cavalry—Gerald B. Webb is now at Fort Meade, Md., where as a lieutenant in the special service branch of the United States Army he will be on duty for a month before receiving further orders.

Mr. Webb is quite a figure in the hunt country and will be particularly missed in the vicinity of Middleburg, where he made his home. "Gerry" has been editor of the Middleburg Chronicle, a newspaper dealing in equine news, for the last five years.

All Gone—

British Officer Hero From Africa Loses War With Wife Over Mustache

"This is the first civilized drawing room I've been in, in two years."

Capt. George Mercer-Nairn of the British Army luxuriated in his return to things civilized after two years of acting as liaison officer with the Fighting French forces in Africa and fighting side by side with them in their spectacular feats of desert warfare.

Flying into the Capital yesterday morning, Capt. Mercer-Nairn had his first glimpse in two years of his wife, attractive Barbara Mercer-Nairn, who has been working with the British Press Service here while her husband served overseas, and had his very first glimpse of his year-and-a-half old son, Charlie, who was born in this country.

They have a daughter, Caroline, age 3½. A cousin of the British Ambassador, Lord Halifax, Capt. Mercer-Nairn is not quite sure of his plans but is hoping to stay in this country for several weeks.

Though he has often faced "greater odds" on the sands of Africa, this young British officer capitulated immediately to his wife's stern commands anent his military mustache. A thing of beauty yesterday morning, it was a home front casualty by noon.

Obviously unimpressed with his own accomplishments, Capt. Mercer-Nairn treats lightly the suggestion that he might be labeled "hero." At Dakar during the summer of 1940, Capt. Mercer-Nairn stayed on and, unlike most army liaison officers, became a fighting member of the French forces. The first of a series of amazing encounters in which he engaged was the affray at Cufra. Two hundred French troops—Capt. Mercer-Nairn was the only Briton in the group—crossed miles of desert to attack Cufra against incredible odds. The 200 French troops captured over 1000 Italian prisoners in that melee!

But that was only Capt. Mercer-Nairn's christening in desert warfare. Since then he has seen action many times and always strategic action. His headquarters were at Fort Lamy in the Lake Chad area.

Emily Blair Off to Detroit To Make Speech

Crowded conditions during wars are not news to Mrs. Emily Newell Blair. Despite the fact that she now occupies a lovely home in Alexandria, Mrs. Blair had vastly different experiences in World War I, in which, incidentally, she did much the same work as she is doing now.

The present chief of the women's interest section of the Bureau of Public Relations of the War Department (take a breath) thought herself lucky some 25 years ago to find two small rooms to house her and her young son. Meanwhile husband Harry Blair was in France working with the Red Cross. At that time she was working for the women's committee of the Council of National Defense. It was their job to "persuade" housewives to save sugar, flour, etc.—long before the streamlined days of ration books.

In her present job this woman, who is lively as a cricket, is responsible for many of the releases and booklets gotten up by the War Department. Yesterday she left for Detroit, where she plans to make a speech before the annual convention of the National Association of Women Lawyers.

Brazil Still at Peace, But Officers Here in Mufti Have Uniforms—'In Case'

"Well we're not at war yet—you know," said a spokesman at the Brazilian Embassy when asked if the influx of officers from that South American country would add color to the Washington scene—sartorially speaking. In other words the Generals, Admirals and Colonels who have recently arrived to make up the joint Brazilian—United States Defense Commission are not wearing their gold-braid uniforms—yet.

Seems most military men remain in "mufti"—except for important occasions of course—until their country declares war. However the new arrivals did bring their outfits along—just in case. If they did go into uniform it would certainly add splash to the town for, like most Latin Americans, the Brazilians have a definite eye for color and design. The army uniforms are greenish gray and very ornamental. The air force—a separate department—wears regulation khaki set off with natty white caps. The navy sticks to traditional blue, but with much gold braid.

Heading the mission is dashing Maj. Gen. Estevao Leidoao Carvalho who arrived here several weeks ahead of the main group. Before coming to Washington he was in command of the strategic Brazilian military zones known now as the "war section"—the northeast coast. He has been stationed in many European capitals. Chief of staff to the general is Lieut. Col. Sayao Cargosa.

Topping the naval mission is Admiral Rodriguez de Vasconcelos who arrived here by clipper early this week with some encouraging words for the Allied cause. Formerly head of the Merchant Marine, Admiral Vasconcelos was for several years naval attache to London.

One of Brazil's top airmen, Col. Vasco Secco completes the trio that will head the military mission. A pilot of note, he formerly served as deputy chief of staff to the air ministry in Rio. With him is Mme. Secco, a charming Brazilian woman. And his aide, oddly enough, is his brother, Capt. Joao Cruz Secco—also a well known flyer.

Prophetic Prodigy Spends Time Here Being 'Borrowed'

By Patricia Grady

"My reputation as a 'warmonger' dates back to 1932."

Lieut. Comdr. Paul C. Smith, the new assistant director of domestic operations of the Office of War Information and head of its news bureau (having been "borrowed" from the Navy), is a man of vigorous—and consistent—opinion. This former chief of the Navy press section now on temporary inactive status from the Naval Reserve, has called the turn so regularly on affairs international in the past that one almost fears to ask him to look into the future.

PAUL C. SMITH

ON THE PAUL SMITH RECORD: After touring Europe with Herbert Hoover in 1932 this masculine Sibyl wrote a series of articles pointing out the menace of the then-rising Adolf Hitler and dubbing the National Socialist movement an underground continuation of the counterrevolution of 1914 to 1918—that is the counterrevolution against the democratic revolution. Back in Europe for another swing around the continent in 1938, Commander Smith predicted the outbreak of war during the next 16 months—this during the era of peace talks and appeasement. September 1, 1939, was not many months away, and again the oracle had spoken. Then in the early months of 1941 Commander Smith went off to England. Invasion was in the air and the odds on Britain holding out dropped. Said the returning traveler, "England is going to catch hell in the next few months, but she will come through because she is a tough customer. Germany cannot get away with an invasion without air superiority which it does not have."

Prophesies War—Then Joins Navy

Not one to toss about phrases without backing them with action, Commander Smith—then plain MR. Paul C. Smith, journalistic prodigy and editor of the San Francisco Chronicle in his twenties—deciding that sooner or later the United States would by dint of circumstances be forced into the world conflagration he was predicting, went out and joined the Naval Reserve.

A lieutenant, junior grade, when he was called to active duty, Commander Smith was upped to a lieutenant commander and given charge of the press section of the Navy. After about seven months of handling news and newsmen for the Navy, Commander Smith congratulated himself. Itching for sea duty, he had just about convinced the department that the rolling wave was the place for him, when the Office of War Information and the Secretary of the Navy put their heads together. A joint statement from the tete-a-teters was issued and Commander Smith's sea duty was deferred so that he could take over the job of Robert W. Horton, who had been deputy OPA administrator in charge of OPA information.

Now out of uniform, Commander Smith expresses his ideas on the war job we have ahead of us with refreshing directness. "We're like a team, and the more spectators—cheering section and booers alike—we get down off the grandstand and onto the field, the greater our strength will be . . . There are only two classes of people—friends and enemies . . . Certainly there must be critics during a war, but let's remember that although there may be alternatives as to methods, there can be no alternatives to ends . . . We are trying to put all of government on a wartime basis, but there will always be an area of confusion—it is part of the democratic principle of alternate methods."

Writes Headlines, Makes 'Em, Too—

Still holding his job as editor and general manager of the San Francisco Chronicle—he is on leave from the Chronicle to the Navy from which he is on leave to the OWI—Commander Smith has a meteoric journalistic career behind him. His early career was slightly mottled, including experience as a hobo, a lumberjack, a gold prospector, an artichoke canner, a sportshop proprietor and a bond salesman. He became financial editor of the Chronicle during the bank holiday of 1933 at the age of 24, and two years later was its general manager.

Commander Smith made his own headlines when he got actively mixed up in his favorite subject—labor-management relations. It was in 1938 that he created a sensation by accepting the challenge of his city's warehousemen's union, seemingly on an unmediable strike, to arbitrate that strike. How he accomplished the miracle has never quite been explained, but like everything else he has undertaken—he started the job, so, of course, he finished it.

War Correspondent's Wife, on Way Home, Tells of Jap Concentration Camp Life

War Days in Manila Bombings, Terror And Internment

Filipinos' Loyalty, Prisoners' Courage Bright in Memory

(Editor's note: Jenifer White, wife of A.P.-Wide World correspondent J. D. White, was caught in Manila by the war, while en route to the United States, and interned there. She and her husband, who was interned in Shanghai, are among the repatriated Americans on board the diplomatic exchange ship, Gripsholm, now bound for New York. In this, the second of two Wide World stories, Mrs. White recalls her war days in Manila and in the internment camp.)

By Jenifer White

Aboard S. S. Gripsholm at Sea, Aug. 21 (Wide World).—It was almost a relief to me when the war started, while I was in Manila. At least, I had something concrete to worry about, instead of the vague disturbance of mind I had felt since I left my husband-correspondent in Peiping.

When a clean break between the United States and Japan became inevitable, Jady began to talk of sending me back to California. For months I said no, very firmly, but finally agreed to go—just too late.

All I remember of those last few days is a mad scramble of packing, mostly late at night, and of selling most of our carefully collected household things.

Jady accompanied me to Shanghai, where I caught the President Harrison with the last of the United States Fourth Marines to Manila. The Marines were gay on board; only a few days later they were plunged into the battle that ended with Bataan and Corregidor.

There was no boat for San Francisco until late in December. I had been in Manila less than a week when the storm broke.

Ray Cronin, chief of the Manila Bureau of the Associated Press and Wide World, asked me to stay with him and his wife, Mary. The stay, a month long, was spent mostly in the cellar. Between bombings, Mary and I made blackout curtains and gas masks, fortified the cellar with sandbags, worked in a canteen and shopped for food and other necessities.

(Mr. and Mrs. Cronin still are interned in Manila by the Japanese.)

The Japanese usually managed to catch us just before meals, but they often allowed us time enough between raids to take in a movie now and then. We got pretty good at judging when it would be safe to go out and when it would be better to stay home.

Dog Never Became Accustomed to Air Raids

Mary and I got to the point where we thought of the air raid alarms as more or less of a nuisance, but Punk, the Cronin dog, always took them seriously. He almost immediately learned that the siren meant "go downstairs." Sometimes he nearly knocked us over in his rush to get there first.

But he never learned what the all-clear meant, and was always surprised when it was time to go upstairs.

Somehow Mary and I always drew night duty at the canteen, where we worked from seven in the evening (so we could get there before blackout time) until seven the next morning, serving coffee, doughnuts, and conversation to the men—unshaven, untidy, desperately tired—who lined the counter sometimes two and three deep.

Smoke Cut Off Sun for Days

While I was prepared for the bombings, I wasn't ready for the tremendous explosions when the oil dumps were blown up, and the terrible fires which followed. Smoke cut off the sun for days and drops of oil covered your clothes if you stood outside.

But worse still was the fire which swept the waterfront on New Year's Eve, when the piers and warehouses were set ablaze before the Japanese entered the city. Watching the flames, I wondered about my two trunkfuls of family treasures and winter clothes, stored in a customs warehouse. I'm still wondering.

Saw Stars and Stripes Hauled Down by Japs

We watched the Japanese come in late one night. It was a bad moment when I heard the sputter of the first motorcycle, that rickety sound I had learned to connect with invading Japanese after five years of warfare in China. But the worst moment of all for everyone came early the next morning when the Stars and Stripes were hauled down from the high commissioner's office and the Rising Sun went up.

It took the Japanese two days to decide what to do with us. Then we were taken in trucks to Santo Tomas, the oldest university in the Orient, ostensibly "for registration."

Built Life in Camp "On a Shoestring"

It was five months to a day before I left that camp. Among my most vivid memories of those months is the loyalty of the Filipinos to their interned American friends and employers. They sent us money, brought us food, helped in the hospital, whispered encouragement and signaled "V's" with their fingers through the fence until the Japanese finally had to cover the entire fence with matting. Their kindness and generosity were limited only by Japanese regulations.

But the unforgettable thing about Santo Tomas was the cheerfulness and courage. Everyone worked and willingly. We were proud of the strange life we built on a shoestring. We did without necessities or made substitutes out of what we could find. We were crowded and bumped into each other continually and got on each other's nerves. But no one doubted for a minute that it was just a matter of waiting and making the best of it.

Still, I wasn't prepared for the suddenness with which Mr. Tsurumi, the civilian commandant, told me late one evening that I was to leave for Shanghai before dawn. The only flaw was his warning that if I told anyone I would not be permitted to go.

He told the same thing to Frances Long, a Shanghai girl who was the only other person to be released from the camp so soon. So neither of us was able to say goodby to our friends. We probably are the only two people who ever stepped free from a concentration camp with tears streaming down their faces.

We traveled by hospital ship, a closely shuttered night train, and, finally a swift military transport plane to Shanghai. And there was Jady, 30 pounds lighter than when I last saw him.

Hunger—Physical And Spiritual

He told me how he had never stopped pulling wires and arguing with his Japanese contacts, and how they had finally agreed to get me back in time to be repatriated with him on the Conte Verde.

It was not until we got to neutral territory at Lourenco Marques that we fully escaped that feeling of hunger—both physical and spiritual—which seems to be part and parcel of "greater East Asia."

There is no way to say it—how wonderful it was to have all the good food we wanted to eat, say what we were thinking without looking over our shoulder, and best of all, to see the American flag flying from the Gripsholm's masthead above us.

Children Can Dress Warmly This Winter

Sturdy New Fabrics Take Place of Wool For School Clothes

Wide World Feature

IF YOU'VE been worrying about sending your young hopefuls back to school this fall dressed in gunny sacks and old newspapers, you can stop now.

Litty Johnny and Sister Mary Bill be just as warmly and smartly clad this year as ever before, and probably more so. Despite threatened shortages of virgin wool and silk, manufacturers are turning out warm, sturdy, serviceable school clothes in normal profusion.

Wool Substitutes

In case there shouldn't be enough wool to go around, American ingenuity is right in there punching. And so we'll have clothes made out of skim milk, called Aralac, which looks and feels so much like wool that you'd have to be equipped with a microscope and test tube to tell the difference.

Re-used and re-processed woolens have been proved to be just as warm and strong as new woolen fabrics, so don't start talking about the horrors of war when you see a wool content label which mentions re-processed wool.

Top of the list in the school clothes fabric list is corduroy, the old favorite now known variously also as cordurex and cordurella. Since it's made of cotton, there's an ample supply, and it is said to be as warm as woolen fabric of the same weight.

Winter Cottons

Other heavy winter cottons are coming into the limelight, also, as priorities creep on. There are smart school suits of sturdy denim, sometimes lined in cotton flannel, and cotton upholstery fabrics are appearing on the list of wearables.

At present, however, you will still find a plentiful supply of pure woolens if you insist. In any event, Uncle Sam isn't going to leave your children out in the cold.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Mary Haworth is now on vacation. Her column will reappear August 31.

Corduroy Outfits the Family

All ready for the first nippy days of fall are Mother, Sonny and Sister in their modern light-weight corduroys. Sonny's suit of beige cordurex, and Sister's of blue corduella are perfect for school wear because they are handsome in the classroom, practical on the playground. Mother selects a beige cordurella suit for day wear. These fabrics are soft and durable and have approximately the same heat retaining qualities of woolens of the same weight.

Singing Star Gives Tips on Keeping Hats Subdued

Hollywood, Calif.—Irene Manning, singing star of "Yankee Doodle Dandy," is widely known in Hollywood for her unusual hats. "And therein," she sagely remarks, "lies a fault which, until recently, I have overlooked. It never occurred to me until I particularly noticed a certain gentleman's eyes wandering to my hat while we were engaged in a serious business discussion. I thought about this incident afterwards and was struck with the realization that a hat can be too beautiful! For neither I nor what I was saying was holding the man's attention—it was my hat!

"I there and then resolved that from now on I would pay strictest attention to choosing my hats. They will complement me—my hair, my face and coloring—they will blend with my individual attributes. They will harmonize with the rest of my ensemble. I have been doing my whole assembled outfit an injustice—and providing my person with a certain sort of competition."

As a starter for her resolution, Irene removed the swathed veiling from a black chapeau—fashioned after a French officer's cap—that was also trimmed with gold braid and gold eagle's wings. Now it is simple in line, and smart.

Saves Coffee Sugar To Use on Face

Barbara Stanwyck doesn't take sugar in her coffee, but occasionally she uses a little for the sake of her peaches-and-cream complexion. After cleansing her face with her favorite toilet soap, she adds another soaping, getting it into a good lather. To this she rubs in a teaspoonful of sugar, which makes it light and fluffy. After ten minutes she washes it off with cold water.

Soap and Water

Mild soap and water for cleansing her skin, lots of sleep and regular habits of eating keep Ingrid Bergman's skin vibrant and smooth. She has never worn any makeup but a tiny bit of lipstick.

D.A.R. Unit Raises Money on Bonds

The Susan Riviere Hetzel Chapter, D. A. R. has initiated its own way of raising money for the chapter's patriotic and educational work this winter. Two card parties have been very successful by asking, as the price of admission, two 25-cent defense savings stamps.

The stamps are pasted in a stamp book and, when filled, the book is sold at its face value ($18.75), to a member or friend, the cash being placed in the chapter's treasury for use in the winter's activities. The purchaser exchanges the book of stamps at his bank or the United States Treasury for a $25 United States defense bond. Thus, the chapter is helping win the war by sale of bonds and, at the same time, will buy a scholarship in one of the approved schools of the National Society, D. A. R.

Mrs. Geoffrey Crayke, State regent, D. C. D. A. R., and member of this chapter, was a guest at these parties, whose hostesses were Mrs. Ryland C. Bryant, the regent, assisted by Mrs. Frank Shipe; Mrs. Harry S. Kimberly, assisted by Miss Luella P. Chase. The last of this series of parties will be with Mrs. Robert P. Smith, assisted by Mrs. Charles P. Creighton.

Saving Ways

Washing Seersucker

Seersucker suits are such high-fashion they don't need boosting, but most women could use some expert laundering suggestions from the American Institute of Laundering.

Although colors are fairly reliable in striped seersuckers, the laundry institute suggests each garment of a different color be washed separately. For instance, all shades of brown and white stripes together, all the green and white stripes together, et cetra.

If your seersuckers are plaid or floral design, wash each garment separately to avoid colors fading off one another.

Unless you know from their previous laundering history, that colors are fast, use only lukewarm water. That's about 100 degrees Fahrenheit, the temperature at which laundries wash all "uncertain" so-called fast colors. Colors know to be fadable are washed at 70 degrees Fahrenheit. If you know colors are fast, however, you may use water at 140 degrees Fahrenheit, with safety to colors and fabrics.

Laundered after each wearing, two light suds should remove all soiled mrkings. Rinsing in ordinary tap water (usually hard) should include six or seven complete changes. Laundries, using rain-soft water, would give five complete rinses; when any hardness is present in water, more rinses are needed.

Seersucker suits require a minimum of pressing but the American Institute of Laundering suggests your seersuckers will hang better and so appear much smarter if all seams, hems, pockets, collars and buttoned openings are pressed with a warm iron when garments have completely dried.

Buying a Suit

Those of you who are planning to buy a new fall suit should select it with the idea in mind that it is to be worn for the duration. Good wool is still available in this year's cloths, but the stock will gradually diminish as time goes on. So you'll want to be certain that the suit you buy will be a style that won't go out right away.

Joan Blaine, the star of Columbia network's "Valiant Lady" and one of the best dressed women in radio, says she looks for two things in a suit—quality and fit. High shades are going to be tremendously popular this fall, but of you want a suit which you can wear often and for a few years, she recommends that you buy it in black or a dark color.

Those of you who have your clothes made won't have to worry about fit, but for the majority of women who buy ready mades, Mis Blaine has this word of warning. Consider seriously spending a few extra dollars to have your tailor take it in here and there, so that it will look as if it were made for you alone.

Hair Brushing Aids Bette Davis' Shampoo

Hollywood, Calif.—Did you know that one of the best ways to get the most benefit from shampooing your hair is to brush it first for at least ten minutes? That is what Bette Davis does. Certainly her hair is indicative of much care and attention. Bette's hair has never looked lovelier than in her new film "Now, Voyager."

Incidentally, Margaret Donovan, who is Perc Westmore's assistant, has given her one of the most striking, yet softly feminine hairdos that has been dreamed of in a long time.

D.A.R. Chapter Meets For Lunch Aug. 29

Members of Deborah Knapp Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, will meet for lunch Saturday, August 29, at the club house of the American Association of University Women. Dr. Grace G. Purse, chaplain, will be hostess. Mrs. Errett Wallace, regent, will preside.

Make Your Own

Good sections of an old dress, or your husband's worn shirt can be whipped up in a useful apron. Allow enough material to reach from your waistline to the floor. Then loop bottom edge of fabric up to make a gigantic pocket, and stitch at the sides. Carry dusters and cleaning utensils in the pocket as you work.

It's About Time

IT'S ABOUT TIME to meet material shortages by whipping up smart apparel with less fabric. For instance . . . make pajamas knee-length . . . or have pajama pants several inches below knees and the top end bolero fashion above the waistline . . . consider knee-length nighties with long sleeves

Exercise, Massage Give Firm Chin Line

Keeping Muscles In Tone Averts Sagging Tendency

By Ida Jean Kain

WHEN a screen star has her face lifted, she doesn't tell the world about it. But you can usually spot the good work by the change in her chinline. Suddenly all the droop is gone and it is much lovelier.

If you have the determination, however, you can do a lot to avert this tendency to sagging. Your throat column is seven-eighths muscle and the trouble is mainly the lack of any exercise. Just a small amount will keep the muscles in tone and help to hold the line firm.

But before going on with our chin calesthenics, let's talk about cream. Don't expect cream to nourish the tissues. It won't. But it will lubricate the skin and keep it soft so that lines don't form so easily. Patting on the cream stimulates your circulation and that does means better nourishment for the tissues. So massage with cream is definitely in order.

Chin Calesthenics

In massaging, apply cream heavily to the hands and throat and work from the base of the throat upward. Place backs of fingers about where the dimple in the throat is and "walk" the fingers up. Use the first and second joints of the fingers. Just under the chin, knead deeply but gently, then separate hands and work outward along the jawline. The trick is to move your fingers so that you do not stretch or pull the skin.

Leave on a film of cream and go into your exercise. The secret of beautifying the throat with exercise is to tense the muscles and hold the tension throughout a given movement. Start with this one:

Tip your head backward, open your mouth in an oval and, resisting strongly with the muscles of the lower jaw, slowly close your mouth. Do this three times. Then let the tension ebb out of the muscles.

Lead With Jaw

Now, poke your lower jaw forward in an exaggerated pout and hold it while you stretch your neck and circle head until chin points over one shoulder, tip head back, and point chin hard over other shoulder, then face front, chin level. Do this slowly two more times. Relax.

Finish with this difficult exercise: Cup your chin in both hands with fingers pointing along jawline. Now push with hands and resist with chin as you slowly force head backward. Reverse it—resist with hands and push with chin as you lower head forward until chin is level. Relax the muscles slowly and repeat three times.

After you have exercised, remove all trace of the cream and pat chin and throat with a pad of cotton that has been dipped in ice water. Then splash the cold water over your face and throat.

All these measures are wasted unless you watch your head carriage. Keep your head up and your chin level. Make a habit of lovely carriage.

Don't just smear cream on your throat at night. Make your massage serve a double purpose—to lubricate the skin and to stimulate circulation. Above, Rosemary Lane demonstrates how cream should be patted and stroked on with a firm upward movement.

Watermelon Seed Necklace Is Chic

Hollywood. — Alexis Smith, lovely Hollywood star, was wearing a very smart necklace and bracelet ensemble the other day. Of watermelon seeds, they presented a striking contrast to her pale green frock. Being complimented on them, Alexis volunteered:

"They were given to me by my grandmother. Her mother had given them to her. During the Civil War, watermelon seed jewelry was extremely popular. The seeds were used not only as accessory pieces, but as trim and embroidery work. They don't have to be preserved in any way, as far as I know."

U. S. Bombers Crash In Air, 7 Killed

One Burns, Other Buried Deeply Near Louisiana Base

By the Associated Press

Baton Rouge, La., Aug. 21.—The Army announced tonight that at least seven fliers had been killed in the collision and crash of two medium bombers near Harding Field, Army Air Base here.

The planes crashed to the ground after the collision about 7 miles north of her, near Zion City, striking earth about 400 yards apart. One burst into flames immediately, the other becoming deeply embedded in the ground, according to Army men.

Army rescue crewds rushing to the scene were hampered in reaching the planes by the thick woods, and upon arrival through heavy underbrush, by extreme heat from the flaming plane.

Crash trucks, ambulances and fire-fighting apparatus were immediately dispatched to the scene.

The Army authorities quoted eye-witnesses as saying a number of men floated to earth by parachute from the planes.

The wooded area into which the planes fell was near a heavily populated section, and the wing of one of the bombers fell only 30 feet from the house of Mrs. J. C. Sibley, who described the accident in this way:

"I heard a horrible noise, rushed out and saw one of the planes somersaulting through the air just above my house. I was terrified and ran screaming down the road. When I looked back the two planes had veered off into the woods, and the wing of one of them had landed in my yard."

2 Die on Trainer

Lake Charles, La., Aug. 21 (AP). Two Army officers were killed yesterday when their training plane crashed during a routine flight over Matagorda Island off the Texas coast.

At the Lake Charles Army flying school, where the crash was announced today, they were identified as First Lieut. Herbert A. Sonnenberg, 26, of Cleveland, and Second Lieut. Maurice Boguard of Eldon, Mo.

Plane Falls in Puget Sound

Tacoma, Wash., Aug. 21 (AP).—An Army fighter plane fell into Puget Sound today and sank. The pilot escaped with severe injuries, the Army Air Corps at nearby McChord Field reported.

The pilot, taken to the McChord Base Hospital, was Second Lieut. William P. Murphy of (8530 165th Street) Jamaica, Long Island. He managed to get out a few seconds before the plane submerged.

WigglingBag Just a Baby Abandoned

The telegraph news wires carried these brief items yesterday:

Out for an early-morning stroll, Sherman Boss noticed a brown paper bag on a Harlem doorstep—and it was wriggling.

Thinking a stray cat was feasting on somebody's breakfast rolls, Boss picked up the bag and found himself holding a 3-week-old Negro baby, naked except for the paper bag.

The cast-off infant received more suitable clothing at the New York Foundling Hospital.

Most men regard leaving home to go to war as a stock story to tell their grandchildren some day—but not Kennet N. Kress, 43-year-old selectee of Elkhart, Ind.

His two grandchildren, youngsters of Mrs. Robert Cussemeyer, his daughter, were there to see him off as he left for the Army.

Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Travis of Seattle were married 28 years ago. Soon afterward fire destroyed the marriage certificate. The justice of the peace who officiated, and the witnesses, died.

So Mr. and Mrs. Travis, with one son an Army officer and another 18 years old, are going to be married again today. That's the only way they can prove they are man and wife—a formality required for some legal transactions.

"But," sighed Mrs. Travis, "I don't know whether I'm born yet. You see, they didn't record births back in Utah in those days."

Allen Daile owner of a St. Louis funeral establishment, has some $1500 coming to him on delinquent bills but he'll h happy if he never sees a cent of it—if the debtors will purchase an amount equal to their bill in war bonds or stamps.

Dailes said that since he made known his novel scheme eight of the 175 persons who owe him the $1500 have taken advantage of his offer to extent of $175.

"Be glad to," the bearded man replied, "only I can't vote in Washington. This here's Idaho."

Herman Westhoff, postman on vacation, walked three miles from his home to a Kansas City service station, and three miles back again.

He wanted to pay for the gasoline he had used in recent days.

He couldn't use the car for the trip—his tires had given out.

Widener Art Valuation Held Absurdly Low

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Aug. 21.—J. Stogdell Stokes, president of the Philadelphia Art Museum, described as "absurd" today the $3,900,000 evaluation placed on the famous Widener art collection by the Treasury Department.

He said the collection is worth between 15 million dollars and 20 million dollars.

At the same time, the State of Pennsylvania announced that it would make its own appraisal to decide the State inheritance taxes that must be paid before the treasures can be moved to the National Gallery at Washington. The tax rate is 5 per cent.

President Roosevelt disclosed the Treasury's estimate in asking Congress yesterday to authorize an appropriation of $195,000 to pay the tax. He said the Government's estimate of the value had been ascertained "by the most careful and expert appraisal which could be obtained."

Joseph E. Widener of Philadelphia offered the collection to the Government on condition that the gift would not result in the payment of any inheritance tax by the Widener estate. The collection was assembled by his father, the late Peter A. B. Widener.

Ralph R. Umsted, counsel for the Pennsylvania department of revenue, said the State's appraisal would be made as soon as official notification is received that the collection is to go to the National Gallery. If Widener or the gallery fails to agree with the State estimate, the question might go into the courts for settlement.

Two Women Here Reported Missing

Police were searching last night for two Washington women, one a War Department employe, who have been missing from their homes.

Miss Margaret Andrews, 20, of 708 G Street Northeast, War Department worker, has been missing since Tuesday, her father, Ira Andrews, told police.

Miss Miriam Gellis, 24, has been missing from her home, 626 Jefferson Street Northwest, since Thursday night. Thelma Shrubb, of the Jefferson Street address, said, Miss Gellis left a note to her saying: "Sorry if I caused you any trouble."

D. C. Raises $70,869 for Russian Relief

At a progress report meeting yesterday, Charles F. Horner, director of the Washington campaign for Russian medical relief, announced that $70,869 had been collected toward the District's $100,000 quota of the national Russian War Relief campaign for six million dollars. The drive ends August 31.

Melvin Hildreth, member of the campaign committee and the board of directors of Russian War Relief, stressed the critical need for helping the Russians and called on all American citizens for their cooperation.

Daniel C. Roper, honorary chairman of the campaign committee, spoke at the meeting.

It was announced that through the efforts of American universities and agricultural experimental stations, new disease resistant seeds had been flown from New York to the Lenin All-Union Academy of Agricultural Sciences to replant the "scorched earth."

47-Million Dollar Judgment Asked Against Pennsy

Philadelphia, Aug. 21.—Stockholders of Pennroad Corporation today asked Federal Judge George A. Welsh to fix a minimum judgment of $47,138,236 against Pennsylvania Railroad. The sum is $19,341,294 more than the liability fixed against the railroad by a committee of three appraisers and Judge Welsh.

The stockholders' suit, filed some three years ago, seeks to hold the Pennsylvania Railroad and a group of its officers liable for the expenditure of 95 million dollars of Pennroad's funds in "investments" primarily for the interests of the railroad.

Railroad attorneys argued against any judgment at all, declaring that whether investments were wise was a "difference of opinion." The transactions, they added, occurred between 1929 and 1932, whereas the report of the experts to Judge Welsh was made recently, and should be regarded as "hindsight."

Naval, Air Battle Reported Raging Off Portugal

Lisbon, Aug. 21 (AP).—A report from Algarve Province tonight said a fierce naval and air battle was raging off Cape Saint Vincent, the southwest tip of Portugal.

This dispatch did not say who was fighting, and gave no particulars of the reported engagement.

Cape St. Vincent is famous in naval history as the scene of many encounters, notably a British victory over the Spanish February 14, 1797.

A Reuters dispatch quoting the Vichy radio reported that a British cruiser and four destroyers had left Gibraltar in the direction of England, and that one British battleship and two aircraft carriers as well as four destroyers had departed in an easterly direction.

The aircraft carrier Illustrious, the Vichy radio said, was severely damaged in the recent Axis attack on a Malta convoy and was still laid up.

Big Expansion Of Armored Force Seen

By the Associated Press

Expansion of the armored force far beyond the original goal of ten armored divisions by the end of this year was indicated yesterday with disclosure that the Eleventh Armored Division already had been activated at Camp Polk, La.

There were five armored divisions plus a number of tank battalions and other small armored units in the Army at the end of 1941. Last January, Secretary Stimson announced that the force would be doubled, with 10 divisions the goal for 1942.

However, the Army Times reports that the Eleventh Armored Division has been activated under Maj. Gen. Edward H. Brooks, who won the Distinguished Service Cross for bravery in the first World War.

("Activate" is Army parlance meaning the transformation of a plan from paper to a reality.)

Seventh Was Last Reported

The last armored division officially reported organized by the War Department was the Seventh, also at Camp Polk, last March. It was this division, said the Army Times, that furnished the nucleus of trained men for the Eleventh.

The armored Force News, published by Armored Force Headquarters at Fort Knox, Ky., gave August 15 as the date of activation of the new division, and said also that the Third Armored Corps was to be activated at Camp Polk August 20, making the Louisiana post the largest armored force station in the United States.

Thus, in a little more than five years, the Armored Force has grown from an idea on paper to a hard-striking outfit of more than 100,000 men.

Statistics Are Guarded

The exact size and power of the armored divisions have become restricted information, but the commanding general, Maj. Gen. Jacob L. Devers, said in a speech in June that "no military organization has ever before been conceived with such fire power, or with such devastating speed and mobility."

Brooks was artillery officer on Devers' staff before his assignment to command the new division, and he was promoted from brigadier general to major general this week. Named to his staff were Col. Charles D. Palmer of Washington, D. C., chief of staff; Lieut. Col. Hans D. Stockder, Philipsburg, Mont., G-1 (personnel); Lieut. Col. Lewis E. Perry, Pittsburgh, G-2 (intelligence); Maj. Paul A. Chalmers, Fort Adams, R. I., G-3 (operations), and Maj. Charles D'Orsa, New York City, G-4 (supply).

Methodists Report Rise of 209,114 In Membership

New York, Aug. 21.—An increase of 209,114 in membership of the Methodist Church for the year ended June 1 was reported by 47 of the denomination's 114 conferences throughout the country, the Rev. Dr. Thomas P. Potter, secretary of the Methodist statistical office, announced today.

Figures on the other Methodist conferences will not be announced until after their annual meetings in the fall, but Dr. Potter said he expects similar increases.

"The gain in membership in the year just ended is nearly equal to the total increase of the two preceding years," he said. "Advances were recorded in 31 of the 47 conferences which reported."

12 Face Arrest In Whisky Fraud

Chicago, Aug. 21 (AP).—Federal warrants were issued today for the arrest of John Factor, former millionaire stock salesman, and 11 others on charges that they defrauded 300 persons of one million dollars since 1939 in transactions involving whisky warehouse receipts.

The 12 were named in an indictment yesterday at Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Gun-Selling Charge Fought By Policeman

Five pleas in abatement attacking the legality of a charge that Felix E. Martini, Capitol policeman, had sold a pistol without a retailer's license, were filed in the United States branch of Municipal Court yesterday.

Richard A. Harman, Martini's attorney, alleged in the petitions that:

1. The information and warrant on which Martini was arrested are illegal, since they state Martini had committed the alleged offence "with force and arms." No such crime—phrased in those words—exists on the statute books, Harman claims.

2. The language of the charge is "vague, ambiguous and uncertain."

3. Since Martini is charged with violation of a section of the District of Columbia Code, he cannot be tried in the United States branch of Municipal Court, where he was arraigned Thusrday.

4. Martini cannot be tried in the United States branch, because he is charged with violation of a license regulation, which is a local offense, and not an offense against the Federal Government.

5. The detective who swore to the charge against Martini knew at that time that Martini did not sell the gun, but merely had delivered it for the buyer, who had purchased it from a Virginia gun retailer.

Martini, who is 34 years old, and lives at 247 Eleventh Street Southeast, was arrested Wednesday and specifically charged with selling a .22-caliber automatic pistol to Norman Stewart of 1717 Evarts Street Northwest, an employe in the Capitol power plant. He denied the charge at his arraignment before Judge John P. McMahon Thursday and demanded a jury trial.

N. Y. Food Stamp Racket Smashed

New York, Aug. 21.—A potential million-dollar racket in food stamps distributed by the Department of Agriculture in the Harlem area was broken up today with the indictment of 38 Harlem food dealers. The merchants were charged with making false claims in cashing in their stamps after receiving them from persons on relief.

The food dealers, mostly Puerto Ricans and Spaniards, were accused of obtaining the stamps for cash instead of food. Then, in seeking reimbursement for the stamps at a higher figure, the dealers allegedly made the false representation that the stamps had come to them in exchange for food only.

OGR Still Alive and Kicking, Though Hit by 'Coordination'

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

What happened to the Office of Government Reports, the $600,000 building constructed to house it—in spite of Congress and high water—and to Director Lowell Mellett, who stood in so well with President Roosevelt he wasn't worried when Senators Byrd, Tydings and McKellar all started after him?

Well, the overall answer to that, as to many a Government question, is: They've gone with the coordination. That doesn't mean they are gone, really, but that they are functioning under a different status.

Same the super coordination of Government information and OGR went into the melting pot along with the Office of Facts and Figures, Colonel Donovan's office, and what have you. OGR did not come out at all, but its United States Information Service came out as the Public Inquiries Bureau of the Office of War Information. Its Division of Press Intelligence became the service section of the media division of the Bureau of Intelligence of the Policy Development Branch of the same office. Its movies section became the Motion Picture Bureau of OWI.

Its field offices came down from 55 to 31, and those remaining are being studied by Budget Bureau officials to see how many can be absorbed into OWI field offices.

Digest May Be Dropped

The Information Digest, daily and weekly, one of the special products of OGR—well liked by many people—is being "studied" by OWI and probably will be dropped. The clipping service, best in the Government, is now part of OWI's Intelligence Bureau. And the thick abstract of news stories and editorials sent daily to Congressmen and other officials also may be dropped. The Information Digest, incidentally, was syndicated in more than 300 weekly papers throughout the country. All the former OGR employes shudder to see it go.

The $600,000 building still is known as the U. S. Information Center and still keeps active at Fourteenth and E Streets Northwest. It no longer stays open until 9 p. m., however, but closes at 6 o'clock. Questions being asked there have dropped from 16,000 during a week in June to 13,000 during a week in August—but there has been rain. Nine of its 12 specialists remain on and keep busy. Two went into the Army and one got a better job.

Housed in the building today are the OWI's Bureau of Public Inquiries, headed by Katherine C. Blackburn, and OWI's Motion Picture Bureau, headed by Mellett. As far as we know, Mr. Mellett stands in as well with President Roosevelt as ever; but there he is. The telephone number for the Information Center still is Executive 3300—or that of the Executive Office of the President. There was talk of giving it an OWI number, but that would be more confusing than ever to everybody who had been told to call Executive 3300 when they had any question. Until a new telephone directory is printed, the number probably will be retained.

Houses Recruiting Offices

The center also still houses recruiting offices for the Coast Guard and Marine Corps, D. C. Council of Defense representatives, and some Civil Service representatives. There was talk once of putting head offices of OWI there, but the building was not considered large enough—especially since nearly everybody working there was retained by OWI in one capacity or another.

Harriet Root, who founded and formerly headed the United States Information Service, is now chief of the service division of the Bureau of Public Inquiries. Philip Hamblet, executive officer of OGR, is a special assistant to War Information Chief Elmer Davis and now out in Chicago with some Budget Bureau people studying the field office setup. The Government had so many information field offices of one kind an another getting them together is one of OWI's major chores.

Main offices of OWI are housed in the new Social Security Building. As of yesterday, domestic divisions of OWI totaled nine and foreign divisions totaled five. The nine and their chiefs were: News Bureau, Paul Smith; Radio Bureau, William B. Lewis; Publications and Graphics Bureau, John R. Fleming; Motion Picture Bureau, Mellett; Public Inquiries Bureau, Blackburn; Campaigns Bureau, Ken Dyke; Education Bureau, Dr. Lyman Bryson; Intelligence Bureau, R. Keith Kane.

The Campaigns Bureau and the Education Bureau are brand new. The former gives service to advertisers who wish to keep a war theme going and their name before the public even though they have no products to sell. The Education Bureau, announced yesterday with Dr. Bryson as acting chief, will have an "adult education" function. Through four divisions it will endeavor to reach nearly all the grownups in the country.

Foreign-Language Division

There is a division of domestic foreign-language groups, headed by Alan Cranston; a division of United Nations, headed by Anthony Hyde; a division of information to schools through radio, head yet to be named; a division of organized domestic groups, with Liam O'Connor heading religious, Milton Starr heading the Negro section, and a labor section head yet to be selected.

The five foreign bureaus of OWI and heads are: West Coast Office, Warren Pierce, offices in San Francisco, International Press and Radio, Joseph Barnes, New York; Overseas Publications, Ed Stanley, New York; Communication Facilities, Murry Brophy, Washington, and Outpost Bureau, Harold Quinzburg, New York.

Approximately 2500 persons now work for OWI here and abroad.

The Public Inquiries Bureau has been handed the job of processing all OWI letters asking for publications and posters. They run to around 4000 a week.

"We have plenty to do," one of the bureau's men said yesterday. "Of course, we no longer have our own administrative and personnel units. They became the nucleus on which OWI built its units. And we don't know just how much our budget has been cut, since so many functions were shifted back and forth."

One group of people keeping the bureau busy is made up of Government people new to Washington. "They come in here to jobs and can't find out about the Government's other divisions. They call on us to help them out. One of our main jobs, it seems, is explaining about the Government to Government officials," the informant said.

Mrs. Annie Stevens Is Dead at 80

Mrs. Annie L. Stevens, 80, widow of George Stevens, died yesterday at her home, 3915 Kansas Avenue Northwest, after a long illness. The funeral will be held today in Philadelphia.

A native of Richmond, Va., Mrs. Stevens had been living in Washington for about a year. She leaves a daughter, Mrs. Violette Stone, of the same address.

Few Extra Gas Ration Stickers At Race Track

Upper Marlboro, Md., Aug. 21.—Either there was a quick-change miracle down by the old race track here today, or else somebody's done the boys wrong about something they're in no mood to monkey over.

The track opened in a great jubilee of flying mud chunks and bets on Wednesday and somebody or another told the Office of Price Administration that the boys got there in cars with B, C, D and S gas ration stickers which the boys claim is a calumny and prepare to let one fly. The OPA promised investigation and prosecutions.

If the report of supplementary ration misuse were true, then—presto, change—most of the B, C, D and S stickers suddenly disappeared today.

Investigators Reported There

There appeared to be about 1500 cars parked on the grounds and among them one had to hunt to find a supplementary sticker. An informal estimate was one B, C, D or S sticker among every 75 A-marked cars. But furtive rumors spread to the effect that five OPA investigators were on the grounds, and not with any interest in the races.

Back in Washington, the District OPA office said it was without knowledge of the rumored investigation. Whitney Leary, the director, was in Baltimore attending a meeting of State OPA directors. Leary, on Thursday night, had said he intended sending investigators to the track "at the earliest possible moment," maybe this weekend, to check the tags on District cars at the race track.

Following the disclosures to the officials, they bared the law's teeth to the public. Violators are subject to a year's imprisonment and a $10,000 fine. So, today, practically everybody drove up in cars with A stickers. The track's business didn't appear to be hurt by relying upon this sticker class patronage.

Business Appears Normal

Joseph E. Farrell, general manager of the Southern Maryland Agricultural Association, in charge at the track, said that no count was kept of the patrons' cars but that business today appeared normal for a Friday. It was too early, he asserted, to predict what effect the announced strict enforcement of rationing rules would have on the track—which means all nearby tracks. The Office of Defense Transportation has banned special buses or trains to the tracks.

There was, in other quarters on the grounds, a greater ill-humor about the situation of how the fans can now get to see the horses run. Some thought that racing was endangered, a subject about which they can get hot under the collar. But, withal, the parking lots had about as many cars as could be accommodated. And essentially all of the cars had A stickers. About one-sixth, by rough estimate, were District cars, the majority of them for-hire vehicles.

3 Negro Soldiers Awarded Medals In Rescue of Pilot

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Somewhere in Australia, Aug. 21. Three American Negro soldiers stationed in New Guinea have received the Soldiers Medal for heroism, according to an announcement today from Gen. Douglas MacArthur's headquarters.

The soldiers, members of an engineers unit, are Pvts. Julius S. Franklin of Charleston, S. C., Harvey M. Crandle of Greenville, N. C., and James Scott of Montgomery, Ala.

The incident for which the awards were made took place in June when an Allied plane, taking off to intercept enemy raiders, struck a log and crashed in the river, splashing gasoline which ignited and started exploding ammunition. Franklin dove into the water despite the burning gasoline and exploding ammunition and rescued the pilot, while Crandle and Scott waded into the river and assisted in the rescue.

Shortages May Close Theaters

The War Production Board warned theater operators yesterday that shortages of material would make it "increasingly difficult" to keep all theaters open for the duration of the war. They were urged to conserve drastically copper, fuel oil, air-conditioning equipment and other materials.

Indian Chief on Warpath

Los Angeles, Aug. 21 (AP).—Little Chief Thunderwater smashed his peace pipe today and went on the warpath against the Japs—in a Navy uniform.

Born on a Sioux reservation at Bonesteel, S. Dak., the 21-year-old Indian's Anglicized name is—John Paul Jones.

No Kin, We Hope

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 21 (AP).—Hitler has arrived at Fort Oglethorpe, but don't get excited—he's supposed to be there.

He's Capt. Paul Hitler, taking a refresher course at the post. And furthermore, he's going to hang onto his name. "Why change it?" he told questioners. "I had it first."

The Federal Diary

Editor's note: Today and every Saturday the Federal Diary is turned over to contributions from Federal workers. Today's contributors are new warworkers who express their views on Washington and the Government service in verse. If you'd like to participate—not necessarily in verse, however—send your ideas to the Federal Diary.

Lament of a Warworker

I rise each morning when six bells
Ring out from my alarm,
I wait in line to wash my face,
A towel upon my arm.

I stand in line to comb my hair,
Of my roomates I have three,
By the time I get to breakfast,
There is never room for me.

I wait in line outside the door,
For the second table "serve,"
I reach the door just to see
My car swing 'round the curve.

I chase a block to catch the car
And nearly break my neck,
Climb through the crowd upon the step
And gain the surging deck.

I "Step forward in the aisle, please;"
When I see my car stop "stand,"
By the time I reach the door
'Tis a block before I land.

I wait again with other clerks
The tardy list to sign
And weep for the efficiency
That never will be mine.

Oh, I wait in line t movies,
And I wait in line at church,
And I wait in line at Huylers
Just to get a drink of birch.

And when the shades of night descend,
In line I say my prayers,
I'll bet sometime I'll wait in line
To climb the Golden Stairs.

I wait in line for the doctor,
I wait in line for the nurse,
And if I die with the flu,
I'll wait in line for the hearse.

And when the battle's over
And the Axis has expired,
I'll still be standing here in line,
Waiting to be fired.

Disgust

My stay in Washington is a perfect bore,
I'm no longer interested in the city's lore.
My fancies built around the place
Give way to boredom, shown in my face.
My enthusiasm to help Uncle Sam
Fight this war and get out of the jam
Has changed to a test of enduring power,
To sit at the table from hour to hour,
studying the act; after waiting in the pool,
Answering quizzes in a regular school,
If it could beat Hitler we would sit all day,
But we wonder if this war can be won this way.

Day of a Federal Worker

Up in the morning, and dash up the street,
Hop on the bus, Oh Boy, what a treat!
Ride for an hour with the boys and girls,
Combing our hair and fixing our curls.
Come to a stop at Nineteenth and B,
Rush to the office and golly, Oh, Gee,
I got to the door and what did I find,
I forgot my badge, Oh where was my mind?
I stormed and I fumed with the officer in charge,
He finally consented, and in I barged.
I signed my name, and took my seat,
What a relief to get off my feet.
I sit and I sit the whole day through,
Sitting and sitting with nothing to do.
Sometimes I read and sometimes I smoke,
But most of all what I want is a coke.
It's silly, I know, but what can I do?
I could flirt with the boys, but that's nothing new.
I could write some letters, but heavens above.
This is no place to write to my love.
I could talk to the lieutenant, he's a bit all right,
But I'd much rather enjoy that after work at night.
One-fifteen p. m. and time to eat,
The pushing of chairs, the stomping of feet,
Out of the back door and into the street—
Across to the lunchroom, where all the friends meet.
We stand in a line, row after row,
Awaiting our turn, but, Gee, it is slow.
We grab our tray, our spoon, knife and fork
And our lunch, which is mainly a small piece of pork.
We pay our bill at the end of the line,
And sit down to eat, oh, boy, what a time!
We empty our trays in time for the rush,
Back to the office in the quiet and hush.
The day slowly passes and 5 o'clock nears,
What a sweet sound it is to our ears.
We run out the doors, and quick catch a bus,
You never before saw such a mad rush.
She kicked me, he socked me, as I went through the door,
I tripped and I stumbled and fell to the floor.
I picked myself up and stood in the aisle,
And rode and rode, it seemed like 10 mile.
We hop off the bus, and for a streetcar we head,
But we have to stop, for the light has turned red,
Then it turns green, and we run for a car,
But to our dismay, it pulls on—there we are.
We wait for another, which takes quite some time,
We find ourselves always standing in line.
We jam and we pack on the car for a ride;
While others remain out in the street.
We are almost home, and, boy, are we glad!
For such a day we have never before had.
We finally reach home after sitting all day,
Tired and weary with nothing to say,
We eat our dinner and go right to bed,
Thinking of—you guessed it—the next day ahead.

D. C. Officials, Senator Study Exemption Bill

Chairman McCarran of the Senate District Committee conferred with municipal officials on the pending institutional tax exemption bill yesterday, but no conclusions were reached at the session on the many revisions suggested during hearings on the measure.

Another meeting will be held early next week, McCarran said, when the work of preparing the bill for legislative action in September will be continued.

The Senator has previously asserted that he intends to make the bill as concise and equitable as is possible, hoping to fix the city's tax policy toward charitable, religious and educational institutions for once and for all—and in such a way that it will not be blurred by conflicting interpretations.

He is now seeking to sift the host of amendments which have been suggested in an effort to guarantee a tax-free status to worthy institutions and yet plug all loopholes through which undeserving organizations might escape payment. All such proposed amendments are now being gone over with the Commissioners, Corporation Counsel Richmond Keech and Budget Officer Walter Fowler.

Radio Appeal Gets Bananas For Ill Child

A dramatic radio appeal for bananas for treatment of a rare disease may be the means of saving the life of an 18-month-old child, whose father is in Australia, a member of Uncle Sam's fighting bluejackets.

Radio Station WINX broadcast the appeal saying that little Ronnie Lee Scroggins, of Piney Point, Md., was a victim of celiac disease, an abdominal ailment, that elements in bananas might cure.

Soon after the broadcast, scores of persons set out in search of bananas, now on the priorities list because of submarine sinkings of ships plying between here and Central and South America.

A large quantity was procured and now Mrs. Helen Scroggins, the child's mother, has an ample supply.

Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, said last night that the disease is somewhat rare and often fatal. Vitamins contained in bananas, he said, often cure it. He added that in New York, bananas have been placed on the priorities list for treatment of the disease.

Ronnie Lee's father is an electrician in the United States Navy.

World War I Guns, Trophies Being Collected for Salvage

A salvage campaign to put the weapons of World War I back to work against the Germans was reaching into the Smithsonian Institution, nearby Army posts and District American Legion trophy rooms yesterday.

As the drive got under way with the indorsement of President Roosevelt, the War Department, New York's Mayor LaGuardia and others, captive German cannon, bayonets, shells and other war materials, as well as British, French and American relics, were got ready for transfer to collection depots at Army posts.

Twenty or more cannon weighing about half a ton apiece, part of the Smithsonian collection, are being turned over to the Army as scrap, said Dr. Alexander Wetmore, assistant secretary. One or two, he said, are still usable and will be put to use against the Axis without being scrapped.

The institution, however, plans to keep articles of historical significance.

"You might as well turn in the Constitution in a paper-scrap drive," explained Dr. Wetmore. But, he added, some of these may be turned in later if the need becomes imperative.

While courthouse and town hall squares were expected to be among the chief sources of salvageable World War I weapons which Army posts are ready to receive, a few weapons which have served as decorations on some posts themselves are to be salvaged.

A couple of old German guns at Fort Belvoir, Va.; several cannon from World War I British tanks at Fort Meade, Md., and Civil War cannon balls at Fort McPherson, on the Fort Myer (Va.) reservation, are among relics headed for the scrap heap.

Several months ago, some 170 old British tanks at Fort Meade, weighing a total of about six million pounds, were shipped out for salvaging.

Appointment of chairmen of all District American Legion posts to round up collections of German helmets, small arms, bayonets and other trophies is expected to follow the appointment next Thursday by District Commander Patrick J. Fitzgibbons of a department salvage chairman. One of the largest collections of this sort is on display at the Bunker Hill Legion clubhouse.

Meanwhile, the Virginia WPA reported it had collected an average of 850 pounds of scrap metal and rubber on 118 farms visited in a farm-to-farm campaign. A total of 100,316 pounds of metal and 856 pounds of rubber was unearthed.

In Philadelphia, iron fences and other decorative iron work in cemeteries were being torn down and passed on to salvagers.

Four Sought As Tire Theft Ring Leaders

District police last night were on the trail of four men believed to be the operators of a tire theft ring. The investigation was launced after discovery of a cache of stolen tires, inner tubes and auto accessories in a garage in the 1200 block of I Street Southeast.

Tipoff on the stolen auto parts came from an anonymous person, who telephoned police headquarters. The stolen property included 13 tires, four tires and wheels, six tubes and four chromium wheel rims. A bicycle and a set of auto mechanic's tools also were found.

Capt. Nelson Holmes, of the Fifth Precinct, assigned Sergt. Charles Langley to head the investigation. One man was being held for questioning last night. Sergeant Langley said he was not a suspect, however, but might be able to aid in the capture of the ring operators.

2 Teachers Promoted, 3 Appointed

Five promotions and appointments in District public schools, one effective immediately and the others September 1, were announced yesterday by the board of education.

Miss Aagot F. Nordby, a teacher at Anacostia Junior-Senior High School since 1935, was promoted to assistant principal at Calvin Coolidge High School.

Miss Nordby, a graduate of the Mayville (N. Dak.) Teachers College in 1922, received the degree of bachelor of arts at George Washington in 1931 and her master of arts degree from the University of Maryland in 1939.

She came to the District in 1929, first teaching business courses at Langley Junior High School and then transferring to Anacostia. She also has served as night school principal for two years and as principal of the Thompson Summer School for employes of the War Department this summer.

The position of assistant principal is a newly created one at Calvin Coolidge and will go into effect immediately.

Cedric O. Reynolds, formerly a teacher at Coolidge, has been named assistant principal at Eastern High School, replacing Nathaniel A. Danowsky, whose appointment as principal of Western High was announced several weeks ago.

Reynolds, who received his bachelor's degree in 1928 and master's in 1932 at the University of West Virginia, taught in West Virginia high schools for eight years before coming here in 1937, when he was named to teach at Roosevelt High.

Dr. Helen M. Carpenter, recently given the degree of doctor of education at Columbia University, has been named to a temporary appointment as assistant professor of history at Wilson Teachers College, replacing Dr. Albert V. House, on leave for service in connection with the war. Dr. Carpenter is a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan, and taught there for several years.

Other appointments to teaching positions at Wilson Teachers were Miss Marie G. Denecke as English instructor and Miss Martha P. Meuser as teacher of mathematics and education.

Posse Scours Nearby Va. For Monkey

There're armed men pounding the brush out there off the Lee Highway a mile from Rosslyn, aiming to kill Pete, a monkey, if they see him again.

Pete's aiming to come home, maybe, when the apple season's over. But the hunt goes on, and maybe for sometime to come because the monkey's gone cop-shy now. He has a good reason, too, because several months ago Pete ran afoul of the law in Washington by biting a child. For this offense he was locked up in the District pound.

It belongs to Mrs. A. W. Farling, a resident of an unnamed community on the river. Her husband bought Pete in a New York pet shop a year ago. The monkey now is 18 inches tall, and strong. It wore a collar and chain on Thursday, in a playful leap from a table snapped the collar loose and was gone in a bound.

Yesterday John E. Ferris, a neighbor of the Farlings, heard some children squealing at his doorway. Going out, he saw the monkey, snapping at them. Pete scrammed. Others saw him gamboling in roadways. Others still have seen him in a nearby apple orchard, munching. They think he'll come home when the apples are gone.

He escaped seven weeks ago and returned three weeks later, famished, Pete didn't know of the orchard then.

Every time Pete puts in an appearance, Arlington police are called, but the chattering little beast usually scampers up a tree or beats it into dense underbrush before the minions of the law arrive.

Several times he has returned to the vicinity of the Farling home, but Pete never comes in—he just tarries long enough to see what's cooking and then scrams.

D. C. Area Traffic Sends Six to Hospitals

Six persons required hospital treatment yesterday for injuries sustained in District and nearby traffic accidents.

While running from the west curb of Fourteenth Street Northwest to a streetcar loading platform just north of W Street, Loren Pringle, 33, of 2112 Twelfth Street Northwest, was struck yesterday afternoon by a taxicab driven by Guy Long, 39, of 5503 Fourth Street Northwest, police reported. He was removed to Emergency Hospital and admitted with a possible fracture of the skull and lacerations of the scalp.

Horace Clark Jones, 40, of 1812 Fourteenth Street Northwest, was struck yesterday by a Capitol Transit streetcar operated by George A. Holmes, 31, of 1025 North Fillmore Street, Arlington, Va., according to police. Jones was struck on the north side of U Street at Fourteenth Street Northwest. He was taken to Emergency Hospital and after treatment for head injuries, was released.

Three persons were injured, none seriously, in a two-car collision late Thursday night at the intersection of Alabama Avenue and Burns and Bowen Roads Southeast.

Treated at Providence Hospital for lacerations were Margaret C. Moran, 41, 632 Ridge Street Southeast, and Leona Sanford, 30, 341 Fifteenth Street Southeast. Patrick H. Moran, jr., 44, also of the Ridge Street address, was treated at Gallinger Hospital for lacerations.

Roy Walker, 24, of Benning, D. C., was admitted to Casualty Hospital early yesterday morning with injuries received in a motorcycle accident on Crystal Springs Road, Hillside, Md.

Reproduction of OCD Insignia For Political Purposes Banned

Reproduction of OCD insignia in connection with any printed matter for political purposes was prohibited in an order issued yesterday by James M. Landis, director of the Office of Civilian Defense.

"This ruling does not interfere with the personal political activities of our volunteer workers, who have the same rights as any other private citizens," Landis said.

"The distinction between such activity and the use of the insignia of a war service organization to promote the interests of any individual candidate or party should be apparent. The insignia represent the organization, not the individual. It is obviously improper to use the organization for political purposes or to attempt to make political capital from the use of its insignia."

Commercial use of OCD insignia also is regulated by the director, who may prohibit such publication or reproduction of these symbols in cases where it would misrepresent or discredit the organization.

Taxi Zone Hearings Are Called Off

PUC Acts After Combined Cab Operators' Group Withdraws Petition

Public hearings on the recently adopted taxi zone map, set for August 27, were canceled last night by order of the Public Utilities Commission.

This action, which could prove to be either the last note of a months-long taxi strife or the precipitation of a new crisis, was taken when the combined cab companies withdrew petition for the hearing, the United Cab Drivers, Inc., having denied that they had any such petition pending before the PUC.

The union denied that its request, made at an informal conference July 14, was a formal petition when it was informed by the PUC that it would be assessed $250 for half the costs of the hearing. When the combined companies, which were to pay the other half, withdrew their petition, the PUC "was left with nothing upon which to hold a hearing," PUC Chairman Gregory Hankin said.

Treated It as a Petition

Under the new rules of procedure, adopted by the PUC July 17, the request of the union for a hearing did not actually constitute a petition. Hankin said, however, that since the request, together with a map for consideration, had been made several weeks prior to the adoption of the new rules, the commission decided to treat it as a petition.

Edwin A. Glenn, president of the United Taxicab Drivers, responded however, that the only petitions he had filed were for a rehearing of the new zone and rate order, and that these petitions were now pending in the District Court. "We have no petition now before the Public Utilities Commission," he said.

He added: "We shall expect the Public Utilities Commission to continue to review their order 2282 until the agreements reached June 24 and June 29 have been completed in all details."

"Vacation" Recalled

The agreements to which Glenn referred were those made after he had called a one-day "vacation" on June 24, taking a sizable majority of Washington cabs off the streets for several hours, in protest against the adoption of the new zone map. This map changed some boundaries of the previous map, and divided the four major cab zones into 21 subzones.

Five days after the strike, the House District Committee intervened and an agreement was reached which, Hankin claims, simply acknowledge the PUC's authority over the cab industry.

Glenn, at that time and during the several ensuing weeks of tension, maintained that the PUC had bound itself to a complete review of the case. A hearing on the new system was then called for late July, but at a pre-hearing conference representatives of the cab industry agreed to give the new system a try-out and in turn the PUC ordered the present higher rates immediately into effect. As one stipulation of the bargain, Glenn insisted that a hearing on possible revision of the sub-zone map be held not later than the middle of August.

No News to the Drivers

Some time later the PUC ordered the hearing for August 27, and Glenn stated that there would be no "vacation" called for at least a month. Under the PUC regulations, assessments for the hearings should have been paid on August 17.

John H. Boyer, jr., president of the Combined Cab Cos., said last night that he withdrew his petition only after Hankin had informed him of the union action. Boyer said that he saw no reason for his organization to be the only one to stir up argument again, and that it did not feel like accepting the entire responsibility for the $500 assessment, "or for other consequences."

Commenting on the PUC action canceling the hearing, W. L. Redwine, secretary of the United Cab Drivers, said;

"This action apparently looks as though it is merely a vibration of the door slamming on Hankin's going out as chairman of the PUC.

"The hearing is a matter of unfinished business with the United Cab Drivers and other drivers as a whole. We are not worrying, as our 'vacation' is merely recessed until the final settlement of that 'vacation.'

"Cancellation of the hearing will be news to the drivers and may result in a mass meeting at which we will decide on any future action we may take."

'The Talk of the Town' Premieres at the Earle

Ronald Colman, Jean Arthur, Cary Grant Costar in Columbia Film of the First Rank; Stage Revue a Brief but Buoyant Frolic

JUDGING FROM THE APPLAUSE of yesterday's first overflow audience, "The Talk of the Town," now celebrating its world premiere engagement on the screen at the Earle Theater, already is well along toward living up to its title.

With deft comedy one of its salient factors, a double-barreled romance, of which the outcome is never certain until the final fadeout, constantly piquing the curiosity and stimulating the interest, and a sound and penetrating examination of the law and mob violence as its dramatic foundation, this George Stevens production for Columbia rears itself as one of the high points in the season's celluloid entertainment. It has substance, warmth, humor and excitement, all interpreted by a ne plus ultra cast that never misses a trick.

Furthermore, the story whipped up by Sidney Harmon and adapted to the cameras by Irwin Shaw and Sidney Buchman, both of whom know their way around in the intricacies of successful playwriting, is of such fiber as to command interest and respect without resort to the war as a stimulus, beyond the remote implications of the mob scene near the picture's end. Even then, no mention is made of the war, but only of the vital importance of the letter and the spirit of the law as the fundamental bulwark of American freedom.

This is not a dreary preachment hammered home by dull dogma, but a thoroughly dramatic climax that evolves logically and thrillingly from the engrossing developments that have immediately preceded it. An exceedingly expert job of play building.

The whirligig of fast-moving incident is given its initial impulse when Leopold Dilg, an industrial-town "radical," sought by the authorities on false charges of arson and murder, appeals to Nora Shelley, whom he remembers from school days as "the prettiest girl in town," to hide him in her home. It happens to be the day on which Michael Lightcap, famous dean of the law, takes possession of the property as a summer tenant intent on important writing preparatory to an appointment to the bench of the United States Supreme Court. Presuming him to be the gardener, Professor Lightcap becomes interested in Dilg's views on how the law ought to operate, but usually doesn't. Discovering his new friend's identity, the great legal mind is for dropping him like a hot coal, lest any association of his with the case imperil his appointment to the high court. Finally conscious of the manner in which the law is being kicked around by the town's industrial and political highbinders, Mr. Lightcap plunges into the case with everything he's got and does a renovating job that clinches his future eminence. What it doesn't clinch is his aspiration to rivalry with Dilg in the affections of Miss Shelley—still "the prettiest girl in town" and more level-headed than most. But that isn't disclosed until the last minute. All of this is embellished with rich comic decoration, a fine flow of delightful dialogue, a little elegant fisticuffing and a thwarted lynching, so contrived as to make suspense and surprise the film's most intensive qualities.

New Colman, Same Arthur, Different Grant

With the possible exception of Jean Arthur, as Nora, the costars find themselves in new grooves. Ronald Colman, as Lightcap, manages a smooth gradation from the suavely austere legal theorist to a man of action and "one of the people," not above a little hot-spotting at night with the blonde beautician, who holds the important secret, and a bit of two-fisted slugging on his own account. Cary Grant, the clear-thinking Dilg, abandons his upper-crust glamour to become a common fellow who works with his hands as well as his head. Miss Arthur is sufficiently provocative to lend keen flavor to the friendly rivalry for her favor. Edgar Buchanan, one of the ablest of the character-comedians, is perfectly cast as Dilg's rough-and-ready attorney, and Charles Dingle, one of the oilest of the "heavies" appears to advantage as the piratical mill owner. Glenda Farrell, the beauty parlor gal, and Emma Dunn, Nora's bewildered mother, contribute generously to both the drama and the drollery. Rex Ingram, Professor Lightcap's man, Tilney, makes the role of the servitor something to admire and no member of the supporting cast betrays any tendency to lower the high level of performance. Producer-Director George Stevens, somehow, seems to have come by the "Capra touch."

Harry Anger's new stage revue is brief, but buoyant to the spirit and beautiful to the eye. Joan Ritter "Jingle, Jangle, Jingles" the business into motion, supported by the "cowgirl" Roxyettes in a clever "steps" number that would interest Bill Robinson, and the Roxyettes close the colorful proceedings with a ravishing feather-fan number. In between, Lyda Sue has demonstrated the heights to which graceful scrobatic dancing can be lifted; Edward Roecker, one of the better of the baritones, has put new life into the "Rangers' Song," from "Rio Rita," "Ol' Man River" and "Worth Fighting For," and the grotesque Shea and Raymond have explored the comic possibilities of the eccentric dance. The headliner is a matter of personal taste. All were "show-stoppers" yesterday.

The newsreel, featuring a remarkably realistic synthetic depiction of the raid on Dieppe, is the only screen auxiliary of a feature of the sort you've been waiting for.

Chatterton Next at National

With Ruth Chatterton and Ralph Forbes as its chief performers, Noel Coward's adult and amusing comedy, "Private Lives," will be presented by Russell Lewis at the National Theater for a week's engagement commencing Monday evening, August 31, with the customary matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

Marked by the sparkling Coward dialogue that has made this play a highly popular one ever since its original sensational success on Broadway with Gertrude Lawrence in the starring role, the story of "Private Lives" deals with the trials of a divorced couple, who are honeymooning with new mates, and already having spats with one another.

Meeting each other again, the ex-wedded pair run away together for a little rest and peace from their other halves. However, their bickerings that resulted in their being divorced rise to the surface once more when they are alone, resulting in the very humorous second act finale that finds the leading characters rolling about the floor following a bitter quarrel.

Dora Sayers and Everett Ripley are cast as the other two spouses, while the addition of Royal Raymond rounds out the small but uncommonly fine company to be seen in the offering.

And Frank Mandel, after an eight-year recess from the Broadway producing field, returns to the arena this season. His first production, "V for Vickie," a farce by Sid Herzig, another fugitive from Hollywood, will be shown at the National for a week starting Monday night, September 7. The cast, a numerous one, is headed by Jose Ferrer, recently seen as the Iago to Paul Robeson's Othello, on the summer circuit; Uta Hagen, Margaret Matzenauer, the former opera star; Charles Halton, Frank Conlan, Colette Lyons, Red Buttons and Taylor Holmes.

"V for Vickie" concerns itself with the feverish gusto with which our uniformed women throw themselves into activities on the home front. The household of Vickie and George Roberts becomes the noisy headquarters for the A. W. C. S. (American Women's Camp Service), an organization which goes in for such assorted enthusiasms as airplane spotting, spy-hunting, first aid, sandwich making, godmother service to soldiers on leave. This does not lead to domestic tranquillity because George, a draftsman for General Electric, cannot pursue the perfection of an instrument to confuse the enemy in such an unholy din. And he finds that Vickie is so devoted to her militant chores that she is delinquent in her conjugal obligations.

As a farce which hilariously spoofs and applauds our women in uniform Mr. Mandel feels that he has a comic candidate for Broadway success. "V for Vickie will be shown here immediately prior to its opening at the Plymouth Theater, in New York. The play is staged by Actor Ferrer and Producer Mandel, and its settings are by Ernest Glover.

When the Police Draw Too Near

costarred with Ronald Colman in Columbia's "The Talk of the Town," do a little "viewing with alarm" when "the law" gets warm in its pursuit of the fugitive from injustice, impersonated by Mr. Grant. This brilliantly executed comedy-drama is currently being accorded its world's premiere presentation on the screen at the Earle Theater

HEDDA HOPPER

More College Capers!

Hollywood, Aug. 21. — Charles Coburn just can't win. After years of attacking University theaters for "graduating amateurs to teach amateurs how to become amateur actors," the other day on the set of "Princess O'Rourke" he was told he'd been made honorary member of three college theater groups. "They're sympathetic — that's all!" he groaned.

CHARLES COBURN

Joan Crawford and Phil Terry each wear a broad, old fashioned gold wedding ring. During scenes, she takes hers off and puts it in her stocking. But for one particular scene in "Reunion" she looked ravishing in one of Irene's lace dresses over nude net—and how she concealed even a wedding ring underneath it, I wouldn't know.

Betty Grable certainly had a wild ride in a jeep. It was piloted by Corpl. Salisbury, who took her to visit the Coast Guard canteen at Santa Monica and to see a preview of her latest picture, which hasn't yet been shown the press. Seems they get them all down there first hand. Quite right, too.

Freddie Martin, at the famed Coconut Grove, has his own method of selling war bonds. Anybody who buys one can come up and lead the orchestra. They ask the patrons what selections they'd like. If someone buys a bond to have a certain song played, another patron, who doesn't like it, will buy another bond to have it stopped.

Not only is this method making for a packed house, but it gives the patrons a chance to get up and do their own entertaining and for their friends to pin their ears back.

And all the time, Freddie's selling war bonds for Uncle Sam.

Bruce Cabot and Marie McDonald are a new twosome. Marie says she's "mad about the man." (Well, ask any girl—who wasn't, at first?) Asked her what she was reading these days. "Shakespeare, for my diction, but for fun I read love stories Bruce buys for me." Shucks! He's gone literary on us. I didn't know he ever bought a book.

I knew him when he was an elegant cowboy, riding blooded horses—preferably those belonging to Jock Whitney.

Twentieth Century plans to name its artificial lake Power Lake in honor of Tyrone.

Now it's the men of the "Fighting First" quartermaster training regiment, Fort Warren, Wyo., who want me to print it in the column that Carol Bruce is their "sweetheart." Well, I'm not going to do it.

Heaven knows, I'm willing to do my bit, but I've had so many "sweethearts" of bombers, blackouts, blitzes, marines, submarines, tank corps, destroyers, gun-turrets, Shangri Las, dugouts, dugups—it's all I can do to crash the column myself.

I presume my rage is due to a remark made by Jim Bush while I was dining with him and Walter Marvin last night. Jim said, not too tactfully, "Do you realize we three represent more than 150 years?" Just then Jinx Falkenburg and Tex McCrary blew in, and the breeze their youth created made me forget—until this morning.

But now I'm a-brooding about that crack of Jim's. I wonder what he meant!

Ann Corio went to her first prize fight with Abbott and Costello the other night, which looks like her last. When one of the flyweights got knocked out she burst into tears, and later, when a fighter's nose started to bleed, she fainted—and the poor guys had to take her home.

LEONARD LYONS

Broadway Glossary

New York, Aug. 21.

DEFENSE: Oscar Ewing, the law partner of Charles Evans Hughes and official of the Democrat National Committee, recently went to Indiana as special prosecutor in the case against William Dudley Pelley. Fascist Pelley was convicted . . . After the trial, the defendant's lawyer told Ewing: "I could've beaten the case, if my client had let me interpose the defense I wanted to put in for him" . . . "What defense?" asked Ewing. . . . Pelley's lawyer answered: "Insanity."

DAVID O. SELZNICK

TEST: David O. Selznick now is having his film-cutter edit all the original screen tests he gave to the prominent stars he discovered—Katharine Hepburn, Vivien Leigh and others—as a movie which he will show in the privacy of his home . . . . . Selznick also has a collection of the screen-tests made by many stars for the Scarlett O'Hara role in his production of "Gone With the Wind." Jean Arthur was one of those who was tested . . . She phoned Selznick and asked to borrow her screen test. He sent it to her house. Two days later Miss Arthur told him: "Well, I did it. I burned that film" . . . "All right, if that's what you wanted to do," said Selznick. "But I think I should tell you that you burned only one print of it. I still have the negative."

SWANK: The Drama Editor of a New York paper telephoned Joe Heidt, press agent for the Theater Guild, and said: "I want to check a story. There's a rumor that Eugene O'Neill is in town, and was seen eating in a restaurant here" . . . "Was it at a diner on Sixth Avenue?" asked Heidt . . . "No, at the 21 Club," said the editor . . . "Then you may be sure," said Heidt, "it wasn't O'Neill."

ESTEEM: J. B. Powell is the Shanghai newspaperman who was the foremost anti-Jap reporter in the Orient. He always carried two pistols wherever he went, because of the attempts made to assassinate him. He was one of the correspondents interned after December 7, and his captors gave full vent to their official displeasure with him . . . Powell now is en route home on the Gripsholm. The newspapermen's clubs of San Francisco, Washington and New York have collected a fund to be presented to him when he arrives, as a token of their regard and to pay for any medical services required.

ENTERPRISE: Mr. and Mrs. Aldous Huxley and their son have moved from Hollywood, and now are living on a farm in the desolate Mojave Desert. Young Huxley visited Los Angeles and was asked about the crops at his family's farm. "The only thing that grew there were cherries," he reported. "But, unfortunately, the birds ate up all of them" . . . "Then why didn't you shoot the birds?" . . . "Shoot birds?" gasped Huxley. "No, we just wouldn't touch the little things."

CHATTER: Republic Steel is the first big company to make application for the building of a sponge iron plant to relieve the scrap iron shortage . . . Lily Pons may join Grace Moore's new operetta company, and do "Naughty Marietta" . . . Leonard Spigelgass, whose rare talents brought him offers from every Hollywood studio, has been commissioned as a captain in the Army . . . The Duchess of Windsor has completed a cook-book which will be published soon. . . . Bernard Baruch is relinquishing his park-bench "office" in Washington. Office space has been assigned to Baruch and his new staff investigating the rubber problem.

ENTERPRISE: Lieut. Tony Pulitzer of the RAF recently returned to America, on leave. He reports that the only night-club jammed from its opening hour until its closing is the one opened in Malta . . . The proprietors of this new club scoured the island until they found an ideal location for a club. The site they selected was in a solid, bomb-proof quarry.

Metropolitan

"The Gay Sisters," this week, renews the litigation over the remnants of the vast Gaylord fortune, and the joust between the eldest daughter and the young business titan she set up in trade and then fought like a tigeress, on the screen at the Metropolitan Theater.

As a bit of lively and invigorating entertainment, handsomely enacted and opulently staged, this Warner Brothers production, as everybody must be aware by this time, is one of the more diverting of the cinema's recent exhibits. It unfolds a slightly frantic story, but it is thickly sprinkled with comic touches, reaches moments of keen suspense and altogether adds up to something well worth sitting through.

The caliber of the cast is an accurate index to the worth of the picture. The title roles are played effectively and in striking variety by Barbara Stanwyck, Geraldine Fitzgerald and Nancy Coleman. The principal man in the case is George Brent. Flanking him in important assignments are such stalwarts as Donald Crisp, Charles Waldron, Gene Lockhart, Donald Woods, Gig Young, nee Byron Barr, former Washingtonian, and Master Larry Simms in one of the most appealing juvenile performances of the year—any year.

The feature is supplemented, as usual, by diversified short-reel subjects and the picturized news events.

BABE RUTH RETURNS

Yankee Stadium, New York, Aug. 21.—The great man with the skinny shanks sagged onto a stool in the Yankees' dressing room. After an eight-year lay-off, he was hot and perspiring from 30 minutes of batting practice. But in a room with the best ball players in the world he was, albeit fat and 47, the most important guy in the place.

POVICH

The new generation of Yankees had just seen Babe Ruth hit a baseball with that pirouetting swing that shattered all home run records. Most of the Yanks were seeing him swing a bat for the first time. For Bill Dickey, Lefty Gomez and Red Ruffing, who had been the Babe's teammates, it was nostalgic stuff. For such as Joe Gordon, Joe DiMaggio, Charley Keller and others of the Yankee ensemble it was their first close-hand view of the Babe in action.

On the field they had watched enrapt as Ruth took a workout in preparation for his exhibition against Walter Johnson between games of Sunday's Army-Navy benefit doubleheader. They had looked at his pipe-stem legs of which they had heard much. Those pins were indeed skinny.

"Wotta guy," mumbled the usually verbose Lefty Gomez, shaking his head slowly. "Wotta guy he used to be."

Joe Gordon, who had watched Ruth pump two balls into the right field seats subscribed to the general idea that Gomez was conveying. "A lot of guys have hit home runs into those stands, and a lot more home runs will be hit into those stands, but nobody does it like the Babe," said Gordon. "I'm believing everything I used to read about him."

Sends for His Special Bats

The Babe was taking this business of batting against Johnson on Sunday seriously. He had sent to Louisville for his special model bats. Gerry Priddy of the Yankees did the pitching as 30-odd cameramen swarmed around the plate to record the spectacle of Babe Ruth at bat again in Yankee Stadium.

Priddy threw about 45 pitches. Two of them Ruth pounded into the right-field seats. Another one he whaled into territory that was foul by inches. Once he even called his shot, in the old Ruth manner. A lad standing near the dugout shouted, "Clout one in there for me, Babe." Ruth turned, waved his hand as if in acknowledgement, and waited for a ball he liked. Into home run territory it streaked, and the great man turned to the boy again and doffed his cap.

In the clubhouse, they asked the Babe how he used to fare against Walter Johnson. The old-timers realized then that Ruth hadn't changed much. With his same complete lack of modesty, a trait that is the antithesis of Johnson, the Babe grinned: "That Johnson? Why he was one of the finest cousins I ever had in the American League."

He didn't mean to disparage Johnson, of course. As we were saying, the Babe hasn't changed much. He knows neither the meaning nor the use of tact. What is on his mind is on his tongue, even as it was that day in Washington in 1928 when photographers asked him to pose with Herbert Hoover, then the presidential candidate of the Republican Party. Ruth refused. "I'm an Al Smith man," he said. "I ain't posing with no Republican." When that story broke in the papers, Christy Walsh, the Babe's manager, flew to Washington to persuade the Babe to make an official retraction. Ruth did.

Johnson Was No Cousin

Actually, Johnson was no cousin to the Babe during their parallel careers. In the year that Ruth hit his record 60 home runs, he made not one off Johnson. The 10 homers that Ruth did compile against Johnson in his career represented fewer than one per season. But Ruth said, "He didn't have much but a fast ball, and nobody was throwing a fast ball by the Babe."

The Babe was swinging a 36-ounce bat in his workout today. "That's what I finished up with in 1935, a 36-ouncer," he said. "I used to swing that 54-ounce lumber when I was younger. The older I got the lighter I liked my bat. My timing was off today. The ball looked funny. In a couple more days I ought to have my eye on it. Hands hurt a little bit, too. Guess I took too much in one dose after an eight-year lay-off."

The Babe said his right eye was bothering him a little bit, too. "It ain't so good as it used to be, that eye. If Johnson still has it, maybe he can throw a fast one by me. But I wouldn't be surprised if he has lost some of his stuff, seeing how he hasn't pitched in 15 years," and the Babe grinned again.

Ruth's hint that he is a one-eyed hitter these days recalls Goose Gosling's famous crack. "I retired with a pretty good lifetime average," said Goose, "but I was a one-eyed hitter all my life. I wish I could have kept two eyes on the ball, I'd have hit .400 every year. With that batting stance of mine, turned around like I was, I only saw the pitch with my right eye. My left eye wasn't no help to me. It couldn't see past my big beak."

Lindell and Stainback to Face Case in Special Sprint Race

Sullivan Also to Run for Nats in Big Day at Yankee Stadium for Service Relief

By a Staff Correspondent

New York, Aug. 21.—Washington's George Case, reputedly the fleetest of all American League ball players, will have John Lindell and Tuck Stainback of the Yankees as his opponents in a special 60-yard sprint race between games of a double-header at Yankee Stadium Sunday.

Manager Joe McCarthy named Lindell, a pitcher, and Stainback, utility outfielder, as the Yankees' choices to oppose Case and Johnny Sullivan of the Nats in the exhibition which will be a feature of the Army-Navy relief fund games.

Manager Bucky Harris of the Nats named Sullivan as Case's sprinting teammate after holding test sprints in Washington earlier in the week. The race will be on a straightaway course.

McCarthy's choice of Lindell and Stainback was somewhat surprising inasmuch as he had been expected to name Charley Keller and Joe DiMaggio to oppose Case. "I'm willing to string along with Lindell and Stainback," said McCarthy. He shook his head at the suggestion that the Yankees were forbidding DiMaggio to run in order to avoid any possibility of injury to their big-shot star.

The program of the field events which will take place between games of the double-header, was announced as follows:

1. Babe Ruth in a batting exhibition with Walter Johnson on the mound.

2. Fungo hitting (open to pitchers only): Kuring, Lindell and Branch for the Yankees, Newsom, Carrasquel and Zuber for the Nats.

3 Accuracy throwing (home plate to second base, open only to catchers) — Dickey, Rosar and Hemsley for the Yankees; Early, Evans and Bengough for the Nats.

5. 60-yard dash—Stainback and Lindell (Yankees), Case and Sullivan (Nats).

5. Five-man relay—Rizzuto, Keller, Henrich, Gordon and Selkirk (Yankees), Case, Sullivan, Vernon, Clary and Evans (Nats).

Trainer Mike Martin, who had been coaching his Washington sprinters for a straightaway relay race, revised his lineup when it was announced that the relay would take place on the bases instead, with the runners to be clocked on time made.

"I'm picking my best base runners, men who can turn the corners, for this race," said Martin. "The fastest men aren't always the best base runners." Thus, he has shelved Walter Masterson, one of his original choices, and replaced him with Ellis Clary, who, Martin says, "won't run as wide."

All reserved seats for the game have been sold, with the prospect that the Yankee Stadium will house a capacity crowd of 70,000 despite the counterattraction of a Brooklyn-Giants doubleheader across the river in Brooklyn. Lucy Monroe will make a personal-appearance rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner before the game."

Mulloy Tops Alejo Russell At Brookline

By the Associated Press

Brookline, Mass., Aug. 21.—Top-seeded Gardnar Mulloy, of Miami, now a naval lieutenant, spotted the weakness in the tennis armor of the Argentine's Alejo Russell during their second game today and sped through him for a 6—4, 6—0, 6—0 victory to become the first finalist in the forty-eighth Longwood Bowl tournament.

Mulloy dropped a pair of games before he decided to concentrate on the South American's forehand. From then on Russell managed to win only two more games.

Tomorrow Francisco (Pancho) Segura, of Ecuador, and Harris Everett, of Jacksonville, Fla., will match strokes for the right to engage Mulloy in the title round.

One women's semifinal singles also was decided when Margaret Osborne, of San Francisco, but drove Pauline Betz, of Winter Park, Fla., for a 5—7, 6—3, 6—1. Miss Osborne now awaits the outcome of tomorrow's semifinal between the top-seeded Louise Brough, of Beverly Hills, Calif., and Hope Knowles, of Avon, Conn.

Dick Wakefield Most Valuable

By the Associated Press

Houston, Tex., Aug. 21.—Dick Wakefield, the $50,000 outfielder who graduated from Michigan University to the Detroit Tiger farm system, has begun paying dividends on the Tigers' investment.

Wakefield was named the most valuable player of the Texas League by sports writers of the circuit.

The Beaumont right fielder, who is leading the league in hitting, over the .350 mark, leading in number of hits, in two-base hits and second in runs scored, was far ahead of the field.

Wakefield received 51 points and was first choice of 8 of the 17 sports writers who participated. Hank Oana, Fort Worth's star pitcher who was converted from an outfielder early in the season, was second with 27 votes; Earl Caldwell, veteran Fort Worth hurler, was next with 21, and Paul Dean, staging a fine comeback with the Houston Buffs, was fourth with 15.

Yankees Impose on Nats; Score Is 17 to 7

Nobody Hurt In Heavy Shelling

Outfield Runs 15 Miles Chasing New York Smashes; Rizzuto Gets Five

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

New York, Aug. 21.—The Yankees managed to hang on to most of a 16-run lead today and nosed out the Nats, 17 to 7. The issue was in doubt right up to the last Yankee out of the first inning, by which time the sixth Yankee run had crossed the plate.

The Yankees didn't exactly shoot their bolt in that first six-run inning. They had something left, enough to roll up 21 hits before the game was over.

At one point in the contest, the Yankees lead read: "13-0." That was in the sixth inning before the Nats started getting obstreperous and scored a run off Marius Russo. When the Nats scored two more runs off Russo in the seventh, Manager Joe McCarthy in apparent indignation sent him to the showers.

Pitches Seven Hits

Early Wynn didn't pitch a single home run to the Yankees in that first inning. But he did pitch seven hits at 'em. Bill Trotter was the Nats' home run pitcher of the day. He pitched Joe Gordon the latter's fourteenth homer of the season with a man on base in the second inning and in the third he pitched Charley Keller his twenty-second of the year.

Little Phil Rizzuto struck out in his last time at bat, which is a notable item. Before he struck out Rizzuto had collected five straight hits, including a pair of bunts.

Charley Keller, though, was the day's distance hitter. His home run into the right-center stands in the fourth, clearing the 407-foot sign, wasn't his longest blow. His longest blow was his three-bagger which sailed to the base of the center field wall 461 feet distant in the second inning, perhaps the longest blow hit at the stadium in a decade.

Nats Get 12 Hits

The Nats were pipe-squeak hitters, comparatively. They collected 12 hits, but 10 of 'em were singles. Mickey Vernon muscled in on the home run business late in the afternoon when with Estalella on base in the eighth he banged one into the rightfield seats. Washington's only other extra base hit was Sullivan's double in the seventh.

That first inning was a sorry mess for Wynn. The Yankees' first hit was a safe bunt down the third base line by Rizzuto. Rolfe followed with a single, and Henrich scored Rizzuto from third with a fly to center. Dimaggio singled to center and Keller popped up for the second out, but before that Rolfe scored from second on a passed ball.

With two out, the Yanks got their last four runs of the inning. Gordon walked, and then there were four straight hits, Dickey's single to center, Selkirk's double to right, Russo's single to center and Rizzuto's second hit of the inning, a single to right.

Thus the Nats collected their fourth straight defeat.

Wheeler Wins 'Victory' Golf With 270 Score

Howard Wheeler of Los Angeles, yesterday won the pro title in the All Out for Victory Golf Tournament at Anacostia.

Wheeler, who also won the medal, collected $75 in war bonds for his winning total of 270, including a 67 yesterday.

Second place among the pros was a tie between Edison Marshall of Indianapolis and Chink Stewart of Norfolk, with 280, worth $37.50 to each of them. Fourth was Clyde Martin, 284; fifth, James Bates of New York City, and sixth was a tie among John Thompson of Washington, Theodore Jones of New York City, and Rozier Beale of Washington, with 290.

In the men's amateur division, Claude Ross won top honors by defeating Robert Crawford, 8 and 7, for a $25 bond. Second-flight title went to Preston White, who beat Lester Lewis. Third flight was taken by Joe Hudson of Philadelphia, with a victory over James Guykes.

The women's crown fell to Mrs. Ethel Terrell, who beat Mrs. Marie Long, 5 and 4, and earned a $25 war bond.

Hearst A. C. Clinches W.B.C. Insect Title

The Hearst A. C. won the insect title in the Western League of the Washington Boys Club this week by defeating the Georgetown Insects in two games, 3-1 and 5-2.

Stu Brown received credit for both victories, while Randy Fones and Bob McCarthy were charged with the defeats.

Gaffke Is Through With Baseball This Year

Cleveland, Aug. 21 (AP).—Fabian Gaffke, right-handed hitting outfielder picked up by the Cleveland Indians from Minneapolis last winter after he failed several times to make the grade with the Boston Red Sox, is through for the season.

Boxing Favorite Savold Forced to Cover Up in Tenth

Post Staff Photos—Goodwin

Slow Bout Ends in Split Decision

Large Turnout At Stadium Sees Chicago 'Spoiler' Win 10-Rounder

By Tony Neri

Washington boxing fans responded with a fine turnout last night at Griffith Stadium, but witnessed only a fair fight, a startling heavyweight upset as Tony Musto, the Chicagoan, who is built along the lines of a baby tank, won a 10-round decision over Lee Savold of Des Moines, Iowa, in the main attraction before 4000 persons.

Savold, ranked No. 2 heavyweight contender by the National Boxing Association, only showed flashes of the form he displayed when he knocked out Lou Nova in the same ring last May.

Musto, whose crouching style has baffled many good fighters, proved the spoiler again as his victory last night pushed Savold out of a lucrative bout with Tami Mauriello in Madison Square Garden in October.

It was a split decision with Referee Eddie LaFond voting in favor of Savold and Judges Bob Eller and Dr. I. O. Singer favoring Musto. The writer scored it in Musto's favor throughout.

Fighters Off

Both fighters appeared off form as the fight progressed and action was conspicuous by its absence in all rounds but the sixth, ninth and tenth. In the last heat Savold came tearing out, swinging with both mitts and undoubtedly aiming for a much-needed kayo, but it was no go, as the squatty Musto covered up in his familiar crouch.

The few occasions that action ensued, the fight was worthy of its good advance publicity, but those occasions were too infrequent as the crowd yelled time and again for action.

Musto's best weapon was his left hook, which he threw out of a crouch. It caught Lee about the jaw, although not administering any damage.

Savold, who had compiled a record of 18 straight victories in the past year, appeared in no shape to fight. He entered the ring looking drawn and left it looking bewildered. Musto, the underdog in the betting, pushed the fight all the way.

The winner weighed 199 and the loser 190½.

The net gate was $5671.40, of which amount Savold received $1701.42, and Musto got $1134.14. The paid attendance was 3809. By virtue of his victory, Musto will probably get the fight against Mauriello in New York.

In a scheduled eight-round semi-windup, Georgia Parks, Greensboro (N. C.) Negro, chilled Mike O'Dowd of New York in 2 minutes and 30 seconds of the first round. Parks, new fistic pride of U Street, threw so many punches that O'Dowd knew not what hit him when struck with the last blow, a straight, dynamite-laden right.

C. Petro Scores

The New Yorker hit the deck with the echo of the blow and as Referee LaFond reach the count of eight, O'Dowd arose, but in no condition to continue and the bout was stopped. Parks weighed 180½ and O'Dowd scaled 183.

In a six-rounder, Lew Hanbury, former local amateur champion, decisioned Roscoe Perry, Negro lightweight.

The preliminary card opened with Charlie Petro, 141½, Washington, knocking out Manuel Forio, 144½, South America, in two minutes of the first heat of a scheduled four-rounder.

Nick Latsios, 150, Alexandria, scored a four-round decision over Billy Washington, 153, Washington. It marked the winner's pro debut.

Danny Petro, 124, Washington, knocked out Baby Smith, 122½, Baltimore, in 30 seconds of the first round of a scheduled four.

Ken Stribling, 154, Washington, won a six-round decision over Jimmy Hill, 150, Washington.

Ray Robinson Stops Shank In 2 Rounds

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 21.—Ray Robinson turned loose his fistic lightning in a hurry tonight and flattened Reuben Shank, the Colorado cowboy, in two rounds in Madison Square Garden to run his all-conquering streak to 123 fights in a row. Robinson weighted 144½, Shank 146¾.

George (Sonny) Horne, promising young clouter from Niles, Ohio, bowed into Madison Square Garden impressively by outpointing Milton Kessler of Brooklyn in a slashing six-round preliminary to the Ray Robinson-Reuben Shank windup tussle.

Scoring with hard hooks and solid rights to the midsection and occasional right crosses to the chin, the 18-year-old Midwesterner more than made up for Kessler's boxing skill and short hard rights to the head. Horne weighed 150½, Kessler 147.

The skinny Harlem hammer dropped the willing Denver warrior four times—the last time for keeps—with an assortment of punches so fast and so quick that a lot of fans in the house didn't know where they were coming from, or how.

He did it, too, right after Shank, a rough, tough citizen who swings punches from all over the house and is always on the charge, had all but floored Ray with a righthand shot that made Robinson grab and hold for an instant.

That one punch, however, proved a big mistake, for it seemed to start Robinson's blasting machinery in motion. Three times he dropped Shank for counts of nine, and the fourth time the roof fell in on the Westerner, who came East boasting decisions over Henry Armstrong and Fritzie Zivic.

Round-Trippers Follow Each Other; Hal White Gains 9th Victory

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 21.—Successive home runs in the fourth inning by Barney McCosky and Rudy York gave the Detroit Tigers the opener, 4 to 1, of a four-game series with the St. Louis Browns that may determine final occupancy of an American League first division berth. Rookie Hal White scattered eight hits for his ninth victory and barely missed his fourth shutout.

McCoksy belted an inside-the-park homer with one aboard ahead of York's twentieth of the season. It was McCosky's sixth. Rookie Johnny Lipon singled home another in the frame before Elden Auker, removed from a pinch batter, retired to his tenth defeat against 13 victories.

A walk and hit batsman in the eighth set the stage for the lone Brownie run that tallied on Vern Stephens' outfield fly. White encountered almost constant trouble in the early innings without damaging his cause.

The St. Louis fourth place margin over Detroit was cut to two games.

Wehrle Wins Over Kovach At Chicago

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 21.—Wilford Wehrle of Racine, Wis., won the Chicago National Amateur golf championship today by beating Steve Kovach, Pittsburgh steel worker, 4 and 3.

Kovach traversed the Knollwood course in 1-under-par 72 in the morning to lead 1 up, but lost control of his putting and short game on the second round and was one down at the twenty-seventh.

The little steel worker moved 2 up on the nineteenth with a par but overshot the twentieth green and was penalized a stroke for losing a ball on the twenty-first to card bogies while Wehrle squared the match with regulation strokes.

Wehrle Draws Even

Kovach rifled his tee shot to within 5 feet of the 170-yard twenty-second for a deuce win, but his opponent drew even on the next by planting a second shot a foot from the cup for birdie 3.

They halved the twenty-fourth with pars—Kovach three putting for his—then Wehrle grabbed a one-up lead, his first advantage in 24 holes; as Kovach failed to hit the 230-yard twenty-fifth green and took a bogey 4. Both birdied the twenty-seventh, Wehrle going out in 35, one under par, and Kovach taking a 38.

Indians Beat Chisox, 3-2; Harder Hurls

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Aug. 21.—The Indians returned to the win column tonight with a 3-to-2 victory over the White Sox, behind the five-hit pitching of Mel Harder. Two Chicago errors helped the Tribe to its opening pair of runs in the second and a hit batter in the fifth forced in the winning tally.

Cleveland's scoring opened when Jeff Heath walked, went to third on Don Kolloway's muff of Buster Mills' smash, and scored on a long fly by Les Fleming. Ray Mack singled to move Roy Weatherly, running for Mills, to second. Weatherly went to third as Gene Desautels forced Mack and scored when Joe Kuhel let Kolloway's double play throw elude him.

Chicago got a run back in the fourth on Taft Wright's triple and Kuhel's fly. The Sox counted again in the fifth, on an error, sacrifice, walk and fly.

Singles by Mack and Desautels, Harder's sacrifice and a free ticket to Lou Boudreau filled the bases in the Indian half of the fifth, and Lee hit Oris Hockett with a pitched ball to send in what proved to be the final margin.

Tonight's win partially avenged the Tribe's three straight losses to Chicago in their last road trip, since which time Cleveland had dropped six of eight starts.

District-Owned Dividend Wins Marlboro Feature at $44.30

Mrs. Sowers' Filly Beats Marandan

By Walter Haight

a Staff Correspondent

Marlboro, Md., Aug. 21.—The Washington-owned colors of Mrs. E. D. Sowers were carried to a driving victory here today by Dividend, a 4-year-old filly. With a $44.30 price tag attached, Dividend lasted long enough to turn back the heavily played favorite, Marandan, owned by George S. Fockler. Third money in the field of seven went to M. B. Goss' My One. An average Friday crowd turned out and saw Dividend turn a form flip-flop that was amazing. The daughter of Aethelstan II has been running like a fugitive from a can of dog food since she won at Hagerstown and was beaten off a city block in her first appearance here.

Jockey Johnny Harrell put up a strong ride on the long shot and held her together in excellent fashion when it came to the final drive. She lasted to win by a neck margin and was clocked in 1:25 for the 6½ furlongs.

Shakes Off Ida Time

Dividend shook off Ida Time to become a definite leader. She drew out. Marandan, generally a front runner, was rated in the early stages. Approaching the stretch, Marandan was placed to a drive and was eating up the filly's lead. However, the move came too late.

The shortest price on the daily double at the meeting came today. An army of ticket holders collected $13.10 for the usual $2 investment. Mrs. J. B. Bond's second Alert won the first race by two lengths from Miss Carlie and Oyster Bar. Most Alert was a $3.60 favorite. The second event went to H. B. Lodge's Beans. The son of Bostonian finally got away from the maiden ranks to the tune of a $7.10 mutuel. Autogo and Prison Ship followed the winner to the wire.

Jockey Buddy Root continued his winning ways and his victories included one aboard Mrs. Cy Butler's Braxton in the fourth race. He rode a heady race and finished in front of Placement and Crimson Lancer with the $4.20 favorite.

The day's 2-year-old race went to G. D. McCleary's Linden Girl. Root sent the filly to the front in the closing stages and she outgamed Vale Victory to take the chief money in the test of five and a half furlongs. Shanty Boat was third in this field of eight.

LAURIDEN was within striking distance from start, went to leader in final quarter, took third set lead and held away thereafter under hard driving. CHRONOS went to front early, drew out, ran out to lose long advantage and Kirk was no help when it came to a drive. BEGRUDGED was hard ridden. MISS DEFIANCE closed with good energy.

Selections at Marlboro

Dear Al:

If you have wondered what became of Peg Hanna, the Washington trainer is reported to have left Narragansett Park last night riding a newly acquired horse named Supreme Flag. He is quoted as saying, "I'm heading for Marlboro and this kid I'm riding can scoot. Tell them to bed down a stall." He failed to state whether the stall was for him or the horse. Since he returned to racing, George (Pappy) Witmer is more serious than in other years. He has a family now and he is hard at work. His ride on the $126 Mary's Lassie here Thursday was a fine performance. Eddie Smith is another boy who means business. That $200 fine slapped on him at Cumberland was a bit too heavy. However, Eddie paid it and he intends to ride his way back into the money. Trainer C. G. Wolford has been fined $50 for failure to report the horse Bargain Boy as nerved. Wagering for the first two days of the meeting was $17,000 off last year's total for a similar period. Eddie Keith, having just returned from Garden State Park, was a visitor yesterday with Buck Schrider, owner of Hada Grace. Jockey Willie Blazaretti has ridden the winner of the first race on each of the three days of the meeting. I believe a check-up of extra gas cars around the track will show that most of them are owners, trainers or employes. Claude Feltner is topping the trainers here. He saddled nine winners in ten days at Cumberland to win the gold watch. Alsab definitely will run at Havre de Grace, so I'm told. Don't forget, you can buy war bonds and stamps in the betting room at the booth. Let's get them in there boys and girls. Trainer Augie Gibson has Walter Haight all shined up for the big handicap today. The Mowlee colt picks up weight off his Cumberland victory and bucks the toughest field he has yet met. However, he is fit and improving and I've got to stick with him, until he bites the dust. Johnny Harrell will do the riding and Clocker Mike will do the rooting. Racing Secretary Eddie Brennan has arranged a fine weekend card. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—APPREHEND will like this deep race track and the veteran appears ready to earn a set of brackets. HIGH AIM and JACK FLY are reported in good shape and belong in the first flight with this kind.

Second race—FAIR FLAME gets in with light weight and never was better. Needs only the right handling and Root should provide that. GLITTER GIRL and HIGH BUD are good and probably will fill out the money circle.

Third race—SUPER FOOT, breaking from the rail, may lead all the way in the day's juvenile sprint. BRIGHT QUEST, LITTLE HOOPS and BIG SNEEZE are a tight fit as they were in their previous outing.

Fourth race—DISCRETION set the pace last Wednesday and will appreciate this shorter route. Looks like the day's best bet. CUSHLAMACREE gets in comparatively light and is a threat. BUTTERMAN is a possible surprise.

Fifth race—I'm going to string along with the champion, WALTER HAIGHT. He has done about everything asked, gets weight from the big shots and should take it all again. DARBY DU will like the oval and is a threat. NAVY for the show end.

Sixth race — BARGAIN BOY should make the most of the rail position in this field. Likes the marathon distance and I see no reason for mistakes. ALA MODE and GROUCHER'S BOY to fill out the cash bracket.

Seventh race—GROUCHY has closing ability and I believe this one will be along in time to take the chief award. KATE SMITH did everything asked last out. DIZZY DAME for the show end.

Eighth race — WALTER LIGHT failed at a shorter route but should win at this mile and a sixteenth. GINOBI is the one to beat. MYSTIC MAN to take care of the minor award.

Best bet—Discretion.

Cornish Hills Annexes Hunter Title at Berryville Show

Scores 17 Points as Dumas Amasses 9½ For Reserve; Jump Honors to Havacrack

Special Dispatch to The Post

Berryville, Va., Aug. 21.—Cornish Hills, Mr. and Mrs. W Haggin Perry's brilliant chestnut, won his seventh important championship of the current season when he captured the hunter title of the Clarke County Horse Show, piling up 17 points.

The thoroughbred son of John P. Grier, regarded by many horsemen as the outstanding conformation horse of the country, continued his sensational winning streak begun two weeks ago at the Hot Springs, Va., event and continued at Keswick last week.

Reserve went to Demas, handsome English-bred showing under the colors of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Vogel, jr.'s Waverly Farms at Warrenton, Va. Demas amassed 9½ points.

Mrs. James Hamilton's Dunnottar Pony Farm entries, also from Warrenton, dominated the half-pint division as Miss Fox and Jiminy Cricket were major winners.

Under slightly overcast skies, an excellent turnout was on hand for the show, entire proceeds of which have been earmarked for Army and Navy Relief and the USO.

A. Willis Robertson, Representative from the Seventh District, gave a brief talk on the purposes of the USO in the war at the conclusion of the hunter classes.

Keesler Field Cancels Entire Football Schedule

By the United Press

Biloxi, Miss., Aug. 21.—The Keesler Field Commandos, on preseason estimates one of the Nation's strongest service football teams, today canceled the entire schedule.

Maj. Gen. Walter R. Weaver, commanding general of the Army Air Forces technical training command, said yesterday that competitive football would seriously interfere with the urgent program of training mechanics and technicians, and ordered cancellation.

The playing field and equipment will be utilized in intramural sports, it was announced today.

The schedule included games with the Universities of Mississippi, Akron, Miami, Denver, Pittsburgh, Maryland and Oklahoma, Mississippi State, Davidson College, the Pensacola Naval Station, Fort Benning and Sheppard Field. All have been notified of the cancellation.

Lupien's Bat Gives Bosox 7-5 Victory

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Aug. 21.—Tony Lupien, rookie first baseman for the Boston Red Sox, drove in five runs tonight to lead the Sox to a 7-to-5 victory over the Athletics before 9388 at Shibe Park.

Heavy-hitting Ted Williams drove in Boston's first two runs with a triple and Lou Finney the last with a single, but in between Lupien took over the RBI department.

In the first inning he brought Williams home with a single to center. In the second, after the A's had tied the score at 3-3 on Buddy Blair's single and Bob Johnson's three-bagger, Lupien rapped out another single with the bases full that chased in Johnny Pesky, Williams and Bobby Doerr. The hit and run was on at the time.

In the eighth Lupien tripled to center for his third hit and scored on Finney's one-baser.

Baker's Talk Caps First Week of Post Grid School

G. W. Coach Demonstrates Pass Defense; Charley Malone to Appear on Monday

Capping a first week in which every day was a red-letter day, Johnny Baker, personable George Washington University coach, gave students of The Washington Post football school a thorough lecture in pass defense and protection for the passer yesterday at Eastern High Stadium.

Baker demonstrated his remarks, sending a skeleton 11 through the motions while he spoke. Before his half-hour discussion was over, the former G. W. backfield star was answering question after question from the class of rabid young gridmen.

With Baker's demonstration, preceded by a tough period of calisthenics and followed by an equally tough session of work on the fundamentals outlined by him, The Post school wound up a week in which a large number of Washington's top gridiron personalities have appeared.

John Jankowski, Central High's mentor, has acted as the school's head coach, and his assistants have been "Babe" Ehrlich, former N. C. State linesman; Billy Richardson, new Eastern High coach, and George Worthington, former Episcopal High coach.

In guest roles during the week have been Orrel Mitchell of Georgetown Prep, "Red" Sweeney and Tommy Whelan of the District of Columbia Football Officials' Association and Baker.

The final week of the more and more popular Post school will find an equally brilliant group of guests in attendance. A surprise announcement from Jankowski yesterday was that Charley Malone, veteran end of the Washington Redskins, had agreed to speak at the school this coming week. Malone will join Hardy Pearce, head of the public schools department of physical education on Monday's program, afterward working with the wingman on fundamentals.

In addition on its final week's card the school will have "Mush" Dubofsky, Georgetown University line coach, and several other experts as its guests. Finally, the second annual affair will end with the showing of football movies at Eastern Branch, Washington Boys Club, on Thursday and the distribution of prizes on the last day, Friday.

Hoyas Meet G.W.; Terps Play Cards

Georgetown University, having clinched the first D. C.-Maryland summer college baseball title, will attempt to end its eight-game league schedule undefeated today in meeting George Washington on the Ellipse at 3 p. m.

In another league game, Maryland entertains Catholic University at College Park at 2:30.

Bill McGurk, tall right-hander who has won four games this summer for Georgetown, will be the Hoyas' starting pitcher. George Washington probably will counter with Aaron Silverman. McGurk is fresh from a 2-1 victory over Maryland last Saturday at the Hilltop, where he outpitched Max Hunt in a thriller.

Zimmerman, Farkas, Baugh Star in Drill

Special Dispatch to The Post

San Diego, Calif., Aug. 21.—Biggest topic of conversation around the Brown Military Academy training camp of the Washington Redskins here today was the tabbing of the "man to watch" Sunday when the 'Skins wind up their pre-season conditioning activities with the second annual East-West battle on the Balboa Stadium greensward. The intra-squad tiff, usually a bruising test in which recruits make their final bids for a berth on the Redskin roster for the loop campaign, precedes by a week the meeting with Maj. Wallace Wade's Western All-Star Army eleven August 30 in the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum.

Although most of the railbirds were casting their lot with Sammy Baugh, of the Eastern eleven, no few favored Leroy Zimmerman and Andy Farkas, hard-charging fullbacks. The latter duo caught the spotlight yesterday and today with a fine display of line-plunging abilities. Zimmerman is slated to see reserve duty with the West aggregation, while Farkas already has drawn the nod as a starter for Head Coach Ray Flaherty's Eastern contingent.

Scribes for the Los Angeles area were on hand at the session, drinking in a fountain of information for use in comparing the 'Skins with Major Wade's Army outfit. Most of the northern writers were conceeding the Flaherty crew no better than even money against the Wade-coached warriors.

Drill for Hour

Tomorrow's dress rehearsal will consist of hour-long signal drills at the stadium, with Flaherty's squad making its appearance at 2:30 and co-coaches Ed Storm and Turk Edwards sending their charges at it one hour later.

Notes—Johnny Kimbrough, Marion Pugh, Jim Thomason and Bill Conatser, Texans all, have been forming one backfield combination for Wade's Army grid team . . . Bob Hoffman, great blocking back with the Redskins last season, sat on the sidelines today. Bob has been ordered by physicians to forego competition this season . . . A crowd of 20,000 is expected for Sunday's fray. Including the 10,000 servicemen who will watch the action as guests of George Marshall . . . Information "drinking" was not all the L. A. scribes did, you can bet on that . . . George Watts' play at tackle has drawn praise from Flaherty Watts sparked yesterday's line prep . . . Trying to get any of the Skins business agents to talk about the 73-0 debacle with the Chicago Bears two years ago is worse than pulling teeth, although Jack Espey did volunteer a funny story on the incident. Espey recalled that the fans were keeping the balls kicked into the stands on the conversions, annoying him no end as the supply of "pumped-up pellets diminished his plea to the field judge put an end to conversion kicking. The Bears resorting to passes for the final two extra-point attempts . . . It is unlikely that Wee Willie Wilkin will see action Sunday.

Cards Capture 7th Straight; Lick Bucs, 10-2

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Aug. 21.—Pointing toward a climactic series with Brooklyn next week, the St. Louis Cardinals won their seventh straight victory today, defeating the Pittsburgh Pirates, 10 to 2, and cutting the idle Dodgers' lead to 6½ games.

Rookie Johnny Beazley, one of the reasons why the Cardinals are hot in the pennant race, pitched his fifteenth triumph of the season, matching the total of Morton Cooper. The young right-hander limited the Pirates to six hits, while his teammates were pounding out 12, including homers by Stan Musial and Walker Cooper.

The Cardinals pushed them under with four runs in the fifth, the crowning blow being Johnny Hopp's double with the bases loaded, good for a pair.

Naiman Beats Printers, 6-3, In Play-Offs

Behind the six-hit pitching of Glascoe, Naiman Photo nine yesterday downed Union Printers, 6-3, for the first decision in the playoff for the Departmental League title. The opening game ended in a 3-3 stalemate.

Glascoe was spotted a five-run lead by his mates in the first three innings, and from then on had little trouble. He struck out six and walked only one man.

Meanwhile the Printers were sending three hurlers in to stop their rivals, who still managed for only seven safeties. Webb, who lasted until the third frame, was charged with the loss.

The teams resume their series Monday on the South Ellipse at 5:30. A Naiman triumph will end matters.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Aug. 21.—Believe it or not, we interviewed the strangest baseball manager of the strangest baseball team today, and came away feeling a little strange.

He is Bob Ripley, formerly one of the greatest handball players in the United States. He does a little cartooning on the side for umpteen thousand faf hundred and fixty fix newspapers. He is the positive manager and uncertain pitcher of the Believe It Or Not softball team which will raise something in the neighborhood of $5000 Sunday for USO by meeting Lowell Thomas' nine old men, a 10-man team, at nearby Mamaroneck.

Ripley denied right off that the Loch Ness sea monster, which is living in Rip's private lake for the duration, will play the infield for the Believe It Or Not A. C., using four of its tentacles, with a first baseman's mitt on the left one. As a matter of fact his infield will be orthodox. First base will be played by the mummified remains of John Wilkes Booth, assisted by Claire. Third base will be held down by a 200-pound dumbbell whose identity will be revealed later. A 2-headed unicorn, one of the few in Mamaroneck, will be the second base combination.

Mayor Corrigan, greatest mayor of Mamaroneck since Uriah M. Hassenpheffer, the last one, will throw out the first ham. Keen competition is expected for this honor, with Danny Kaye favored by form players. Gypsy Rose Lee, the literary figure whose team of muscular burlesque queens will play a preliminary game against the chorus line of "Let's Face It," will throw out the first bump.

Surprise Manager Ripley in the Hasheesh room of his stupendous and curious estate, while he inhaled a home run from a A Pharoah's waterpipe unearthed in the ruins of Lou Nova, we asked him to list some of the celebrities who would imbibe in his annual charity game.

Answering in sanskrit, with a slight algebraic accent, Rip said:

"Take Sir Hubert Wilkins, for instance, but bring him back. He'll play. We expect to pull the hidden-ball trick with the aid of his beard which, believe it or not, is the only beard that ever traveled to the North Pole by submarine."

"Anybody else?" we inquired, pencil poised.

"Of course," he said, tossing a small chamois bag of pieces of eight to the Nubian slave who was fanning him with a copy of Captain Billy's Whizbang. "Nick Kenny, Jack Benny, Sonja Henie, Jack Jenny, Fred Tenney, Rud Rennie and Youngman Henny. They'll bat in that order, if we get our raps."

"We they got?" we asked, fretfully.

"Lowell Thomas, whose combined wordage on the air would reach from here to Saturn with enough left over to make a u-turn around Kate Smith," Ripley snapped, clucking a mermaid under her dimpled fin as she swam across his flooded living room in pursuit of a snubnosed due-bill.

"He'll be assisted by nine of the youngest men ever to play for the nine old men. There will be J. Edgar Hoover, who'll arrest the first man who steals a base; Harry von Zell, who may have to be coaxed for upwards of one second to appear before his public; Vincent Lopez, who, believe it or not, is not related to either Joe or Vincent DiMaggio; Lanny Ross and either Cliff or Jimmy Melton."

P. S. Honestly, there is going to be such a game, with all these and other Broadway and sports stars gamboling through a double-header, the entire proceeds going to USO. We were just kidding you, however, about the Loch Ness sea monster living in Rip's private lake. It's living in the estate's jade bath room, and refuses to turn off the faucets. Keeps singing, "Deep in the Heart of Texas" at the top of its 80 lungs, but can't get the claps right.

Fears of Heavy Dividend Casualties Not Borne Out by First-Half Payments

New York, Aug. 21.—Wall Street isn't going off the deep end with hearty predictions about stockholders' future dividends but it has figures to show that:

Stockholders received dividends from more common stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange in this country's first half-year of war than in the first six months of peaceful 1941.

But—not as much money was paid.

In spite of high taxes and great shifts in manufacturing activities, 560 listed common stocks in the first six months of this year paid dividends to totaling $885,712,000, compared with 550 stocks which yielded $961,315,000 in dividends in the same period of 1941.

Although 24.6 per cent of the dividend-paying stocks reduced their half-year's payments, 25 per cent increased them.

The estimated net result, however, was an aggregate dividend payment 6.8 per cent less than in the six months ended June 30, 1941.

The Exchange, magazine published by the New York Stock Exchange, says that the half-year's performance, as a whole, "indicates statistically that apprehension lest rising taxes and costs cause heavy dividend casualties was not borne out by results."

But this does not mean that what was true in the first six months of the year will be repeated in the last six. The result of heavier taxes cannot be forecast nor can changes in corporate reserve accounts and operating costs.

But the impact of higher taxes upon net income of corporations with stocks listed on the Exchange was heavy during the first half of 1941 with a notable exception—the railroads.

"Among the groups arranged by industries," says The Exchange the rails, despite wage increases that applied throughout the period, scored a gain of more than 42 per cent in net income over the same six months of last year, reflecting heavy war traffic and economies in train loading.

"The results disclosed in a table of 450 listed corporations by groups offers an almost complete reversal of last year's earnings" picture as of the end of June.

"But despite the large tax allowances, no less than 437 of the 450 corporations were able to report profits for the half-year. And while some abrupt and substantial reversals occurred, the average decline of net income of the groups as a whole was less than 20 per cent."

The Street was particularly impressed by a 56.9 per cent increase of aggregate dividend distribution in the electrical equipment group which has 16 issues listed on the exchange.

Thirteen of those listings paid dividends, three of them at an increased rate, totaling an estimated $30,949,000.

While railroad dividends went up 6.4 per cent, public utility payments dropped exactly 6.4 per cent. The farm machinery group climbed 15.8 per cent; the tobacco group dropped 17.3 per cent.

Shipbuilding, working at capacity now, paid its stockholders 28 per cent more in dividends this year although the iron and steel group—an industry in record production—increased dividend payments only 3.8 per cent.

Other groups listed on the exchange showed the following percentage of increase in dividend payments, although not all the stocks listed in any one group paid dividends at all, while only some made increased payments to the stockholders:

Business and office equipment, 0.6; garment, 13.5; leather, 10.8; machinery and metal, 3.1; paper and publishing, 8.6; petroleum, 3.7.

Other groups showed dividend payments declined were the following, with the percentage decrease:

Amusement, 0.5; automobile, 33.0; aviation, 37.1; building, 8.9; chemical, 16.3; financial, 7.5; food, 4.0; mining, 5.8; retail merchandising, 7.1; rubber, 9.4, and textile, 19.8.

Wall Street analysts say the future trend of dividends is particularly difficult to foresee at this time. Of course, one of the immediate uncertainties is taxes. Rates have not been finally fixed, and it is pretty commonly expected that the tax bill in the making will be superseded by a new one next year.

But, in addition to taxes, there are many other uncertainties. First is the question of profits made on war business. The Army and Navy now are renegotiating contracts with suppliers. Also, there is some opinion in Congress that a new measure putting a flat percentage limitation on profits on war business should be enacted.

On top of all this, there are further uncertainties over the longer range. What reserves should corporations set aside to convert back to peacetime work? There is no uniformity of opinion. Increasingly plants and machinery are being turned over to strictly war operation. How much of what the concerns have at the time will be useful for peacetime operations, when peace comes?

In many instances, equipment is being subjected to exceptional wear and tear. Also, great technological change is expected as result of the war, so that much of present plant may be obsolete before the Nation gets far into the new peacetime. In view of all uncertainties, most Wall Streeters feel stockholders have fared pretty well.

Dip Continues In Retail Sales During Week

By the United Press

New York, Aug. 21.—Retail buying during the past week coasted along at levels 6 to 10 per cent below the dollar volume of a year ago, Dun & Bradstreet reported today.

The mercantile agency noted, however, that in several areas there were gains, although they were too small to turn the trend upward.

Retailers' reports stressed evidence of an increase in cash buying and of a trend from lower to medium priced goods.

"A particularly strong uptrend developed in a number of smaller cities where war plants are located," the agency's review of retail trade said, adding that few stores found the stricter credit terms a major factor in the recent lull.

The general downtrend from 1941 figures was largest in the Middle West, where sales volume was 8 to 15 per cent below a year ago. Other percentage declines by regions were New England 5 to 9, East 6 to 13, South 3 to 7, Southwest 5 to 10, Northwest 4 to 7 and Pacific Coast 4 to 9.

Wholesale business continued on a consecutive basis. One feature of the week's trade was a report that many retailers were seeking new lines of goods to offset shortages in products now unobtainable because of priorities.

Crude Oil Stocks Continue Drop

By the Associated Press

The Bureau of Mines reported yesterday stocks of domestic and foreign crude petroleum at the close of the week ended August 15 totaled 246,433,000 barrels, a net decrease of 542,000 barrels compared with the previous week. Stocks of domestic oil decreased 372,000 barrels for the week and foreign crude decreased 170,000 barrels.

Daily average production for the week was 3,893,000 barrels or a decrease of 77,000 barrels compared with the previous week's level. Runs to stills averaged 3,711,000 barrels daily, an increase of 150,000 barrels for the preceding week.

Youngstown, Ohio, Aug. 21 (AP).—Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.'s new blast furnace, 200 feet high and weighing nearly 700 tons, was moved 112 feet this week and placed on its foundation at the Campbell plant in one of the first industrial moving projects of its kind.

Sheet & Tube pioneered the way by building the furnace on a movable base while an old furnace was being razed, to reduce loss of time 90 to 95 days and increase the district's iron production nearly 100,000 tons for war purposes.

Stockholders Charge Fraud In Prince Deals

By the Associated Press

Providence, R. I., Aug. 21.—Four suits involving sums which may run into millions of dollars were filed in United States District Court today against Frederick H. Prince, Boston and Newport financier, and against two holding companies in which he is the principal stockholder.

Complaints in the four suits, brought by minority stockholders, told a detailed story of what they said were Prince's financial operations dating back to 1911. Prince was accused of "publication of false and misleading statements in reports to stockholders and balance sheets and incorrect information given out to financial publications."

"Misleading" Advice

In 1911, the petition stated, Prince became a controlling figure in the Chicago Junction Railways and Union Stockyards Co., a holding company incorporated in New Jersey and commonly known as the Jersey Co. While president and director of the Jersey Co., it was charged, Prince was instrumental in organizing the Chicago Stockyards Co., popularly known as the Maine Corp.

The petition said that Prince advised stockholders of the Jersey Co. to enter into a trust agreement under which they could have their choice of receiving from the Maine Corp. an annual payment of $9 per share of their Jersey Co. stock or they could exchange their certificates of common stock in the Jersey Co. for Maine Corp. bonds.

It was alleged that Prince did not reveal to the Jersey Co. stockholders that he was one of the organizers of the Maine Corp.

"One of the purposes of the plan," the complaint said "was to enable the defendant and J. Ogden Armour to obtain a much greater part of the earnings of the Jersey Co. and its subsidiaries than they could obtain from a continuation of the then existing situation."

"The defendant never informed any stockholders of many important facts which were well known to him and which indicated that the income of the Jersey Co. would probably be very large after 1911."

Accounting Asked

Plaintiffs demanded an accounting to ascertain the amounts of money and the value of property "which the Jersey Co. and its subsidiaries on account of the transactions mentioned:" That Prince pay to the Jersey Co. such damages as it has sustained and to pay over to it "all the gains, profits and advantages derived by the defendant on account of such transactions."

The plaintiffs also demanded that Prince be ordered to repay to the Jersey company all of the compensation received from it as president, director or otherwise since January 1, 1911, "or such part of such compensation as was excessive."

The suits were brought in the names of Richard C. Paine, John L. Hall and William Dexter, as trustees under the will of Ruth S. Thayer; by Alexander Whiteside, Edward L. Bigelow and John Thayer as trustees under the will of Nathaniel Thayer, and by E. Sohier Welch, trustee under an indenture dated November 22, 1898.

Joy-Riding Ban Hits Treasury

Joy riders are not the only ones hard hit by the wartime automobile situation. The Treasury said yesterday it is costing the Government about 19 million dollars a month in lost taxes.

In July collections on new automobiles were $10,079,031 less than last year, taxes on new tires and tubes $4,808,682 less, gasoline taxes dropped $3,275,595, lubricating oil taxes declined $1,089,311 and new truck taxes fell $544,908.

The silver lining for the Treasury was a $425,477 jump in taxes on parts to keep old automobiles going.

San Antonio to Sell $33,950,000 Bonds

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 21.—New money financing by States and municipalities scheduled for next week rose sharply over the unusually small volume this week, the Daily Bond Buyer reported today.

Eleven separate offerings will aggregate $34,118,500, compared with the low volume of $2,106,297 marketed in the current period. The weekly average for the year to date was placed at $23,420,470.

Next week's total is accounted for almost entirely by one issue, however, that of San Antonio, Tex., which amounts to $33,950,000 and will be marketed on Monday. The bonds will be electric light and power plant and gas distribution obligations. The city will use the proceeds to acquire such property now held by private concerns. Maturities will range from 1944 to 1972.

Fifth Aluminum Plant Starts in Northwest

Portland, Oreg., Aug. 21 (AP).—Pig aluminum from the Pacific northwest's fifth aluminum reduction plant, which started operations yesterday, will be poured within ten days, Dr. Paul J. Raver, Bonneville administrator, said today.

Approximately 40,000 kilowatts of Bonneville-Grand Coulee power will be used by the plant when it reaches capacity, he said.

The plant was built for the Defense Plant Corporation by the Olin Corporation which will operate it under contract. Its location was not disclosed.

Texas Co. Collects 40,000 Tons of Rubber

New York, Aug. 21 (AP).—More than 40,000 tons of scrap rubber, about 9 per cent of the national total, was credited today by Texas Co. president W. S. Rogers to the oil concern's dealer organization.

Rogers said the difference between the money received for the scrap from the Rubber Reserve Corporation and the amount paid for it, "an amount which it is hoped will exceed $300,000," would be distributed to the four relief organizations designated by President Roosevelt.

Listen! with Glynn

A funny fellow, this Phil Baker! Tomorrow happens to be his birthday. Tomorrow also happens to be the tenth anniversary of his getting a radio assignment. So with all the eclat in the world Mr. Baker has very seriously decided to make tomorrow "Baker Day" for all the world to know about.

For his "Take It Or Leave It" broadcast over WJSV at 10 p. m. he is only admitting people named Baker to the radio theater. That means necessarily that all the contestants will be named Baker. And don't think it's been easy, either, because Phil had to send telegrams to all the Bakers in the New York telephone book in order to accomplish that. Well known Bakers from the radio and theater worlds have indicated they'd be present. These include Bonnie, Benny, Belle and Kenny. All service men named Baker also have been invited to attend the broadcast.

All in all, it should make the largest Baker's dozen that's ever been assembled. And the same can probably be said for the number of puns that will roll around the place.

Baker, who will be a young man of 45 when tomorrow midnight arrives, has spent a mere 27 years in show business. It would have been more except that he took time out during the last war to serve in the Navy. He was for years a member of the vaudeville team of Baker and Bernie, the Bernie being a gentleman now fairly well known in the orchestra world. He was the first comedian ever to use stooges. Now everybody's doing it.

Contract Bridge

Here is a playing problem, taken from last year's master's team game, for you to consider. The solution is presented below.

♠AK84

(NORTH)
(SOUTH)
♠75
♡Q87642
◇93
♣754

East	South	West	North
3◇	Pass	Pass	3NT
Pass	4♡	Pass	Pass
Pass

West opens the diamond ten; how do you plan the play of the hand?

Declarer made his four-heart contract by a safety play which guarded against the possibility of the three adverse trumps being in the West hand. He won the opening lead with dummy's ace, cashed the ace, king of spades and entered the closed hand by ruffing a third spade. A small trump was then led up to dummy.

South's careful play was rewarded when he discovered that West held the three outstanding trumps and a doubleton diamond. If declarer had immediately led a trump from dummy, West would win, return a diamond to his partner's king and eventually cash his third trump, the ten, for the setting trick. By first leading trumps from the closed hand, South captured West's ten and limited the defense to two trump tricks and the diamond king.

CRAB FISHERS—Crabbing was fun for these two youngsters in the group from Washington at Camp Brandon, near Annapolis, Md. Here's the way to hold hardshells without being clawed

SUPPER TIME—"Ladies first," say the boys, who fall in line behind the girls at the cafeteria-style mess hall at Camp Brandon. Volunteers of America see that they get nutritious food

WADING IN THE SOUTH RIVER—Every day that the sun shines the children are taken to the South River to swim or wade. Maj. W. O. Ulrey, director of the Volunteers of America and supervisor of the camp, has seen to it that the youngsters have every possible health advantage

"NOT IN THE DOG HOUSE"—This 1-year-old 30-pounder stepped over the little fence and seated himself in front of the camp's dog house to examine the American flag

Bonds— In addition to buying war bonds every Friday, carpenters working on Area 3 of the new War Department Building give four bonds a week. Friday Is Bond Day For Men Working On War Building

Every Friday, without fail, the brawny, sunburned carpenters at the nearly completed mammoth new War Department Building in Arlington use a part of their lunch period to buy War Bonds with their boom-time pay, and they're no pikers.

All the other classes of workmen do the same. But consider the carpenters and you have a picture of them all. Those in Section C number 450. In one July week, the carpenters bought $7864 worth of bonds, while the workmen of all classes in the five sections bought to the tune of $35,479.39 in that particular week.

The C Section carpenters will average around $2000 a week in bonds. Aside from the individual buying, they hold, every Friday, a bond raffle, calling in two pretty girl clerks from the world's largest office building to draw the numbers. Generally, they raffle a $1000 bond and a couple of $500 bonds. They like this. The men, working for the John McShain Co., have had their own bond program for some eight months now.

In charge of them is Section C Superintendent Edward G. King, 20, Virginia Military Institute graduate, youngest section chief on the project. M. J. Strickroth is his assistant; C. C. Lawrence is the carpenter steward, and T. C. Fowler, the general carpenter foreman.

The WASHINGTON Merry-Go-Round

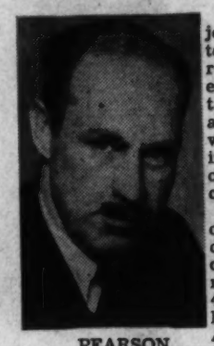
A Marvel at Saving Critical Materials

EDITOR'S NOTE—The plastic ring, in substitute for the brass ring, but still good for one free ride on the Washington Merry-Go-Round, today goes to Col. George F. Doriot of the United States Quartermaster Corps.)

Never was the award of a plastic instead of a brass ring more fitting than this to Col. Georges F. Doriot, for it is his job in the Quartermaster Corps to find substitutes for critical materials.



PEARSON

And he has done a remarkable job. He has developed plastic buttons, plastic combs, plastic safety razors and wooden beds. He has even found a substitute for military stuffiness. He goes bustling about his hot, barn-like office wearing suspenders and no coat—in violence to all regulations. The only thing this French war veteran can't find a substitute for is time.

The first thing we saw around his office was the wooden double-decker bed, to replace the iron cots of the hate-to-get-up-in-the-morning days. The cot required 49.8 pounds of iron. The new bed has only springs of iron—8 pounds. And the double-decker save space too.

Before aluminum became short, the field range (Army cook stove) was made entirely of aluminum and stainless steel. Now it is made of black iron, brightened in spots with enamel.

The canteen which every soldier carries used to be made of aluminum. Now, the Quartermaster general has produced a plastic canteen of the same shape and size—which doesn't burn your fingers when full of hot coffee, and which will take a lot of rough treatment. The colonel invited us to lay this plastic vessel on the floor and jump on it. We did—with both feet. We found the name to be a misnomer. Nothing plastic about it. Plastic as iron! (Believe it or not, this new canteen is made of cotton linters and ethyl alcohol.

And now, if the Army had all the aluminum in the world, they wouldn't go back to it.

'Accept No Substitutes'

COLONEL DORIOT has a strong French accent and bright French eyes. He is ready to accept any challenge? Bring him a rubber raincoat, a steel safety razor, a brass nozzle—anything made of critical materials, and he will produce the same thing without the critical materials. He lives and breathes the very reverse of that old slogan—"beware of imitations—accept no substitutes."

He spends 12 hours a day trying to find substitutes for the things the Japanese have thieved in the Far East, and trying to find them at such a weight that the United States soldier, who carried a 77-pound pack on Bataan, will find himself on a par with the Jap soldier, whose jungle pack weighs only 26 pounds.

If you are an enlisted man, look at the buttons on your overcoat. Brass. Then look at the buttons on the overcoat of the men just inducted last week. Plastic.

The advantage is twofold—saving of brass, which can be used for shells, and a loss of luster, which means that troops are not so easily spotted by reflection of light. Of course, there is also a loss of shine and and with it a possible loss of morale. It's tough to have dull colored buttons, but tougher to know that they are made of formaldehyde, the same stuff that makes embalming fluid.

QMC proposed plastic buttons for the soldier's blouse as well as for his overcoat, but the General Staff overruled them. It's a matter of morale," said the General Staff. "We've got to have a little shine for the boys."

'British Buttons'

WHEN THE BRITISH sent samples of their equipment to Washington, to indicate requirements under Lend-Lease, they included a lot of things which Col. Doriot says they'll never get. One little item was intimately associated with this question of shiny buttons. In every British soldier's kit is a so-called buttonboard, a brass plate with slits in it, which the soldier holds against his coat for protection while polishing the brass buttons.

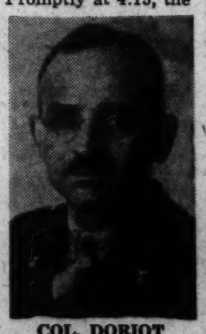
Colonel Doriot is eliminating both the brass buttons and the brass buttonboard—not to mention the rubber boots and the steel whistle and the regulation "housewife." The boots can be made of synthetic, the whistle of plastic and the "housewife" sewing kit at least can forego the brass thimble, for thimbles are made of plastics these days—in Colonel Doriot's Army.

Doriot disapproves vigorously of brass in any form except in shells. He disapproves of brass buttons, brass nozzles, brass zippers, and finally he disapproves of brass hats.

THOUGH THIS IS HIS SECOND WAR, Doriot normally is a civilian. He served as an artilleryman with the French army in the first World War. He was a Frenchman then. He is still French to his fingertips, but an American citizen for many years. He has been chairman of the board of the National Can Co., and a professor at the Harvard Business School. Many of the men who surround him in the barn he calls an office (temporary building B) are former students from that school.

They work for Doriot with the loyalty of zealots. The shop opens at 7:30 a. m., in a part of town miles removed from respectable residential sections. Closing hour is supposed to be 4:15, and that's when they lower the flag, but few can get away so early.

THIS FLAG CEREMONY is unique. Nothing else like it in Washington. All day the flag, on a wooden pole in the middle of the floor, flutters in a breeze created by an electric fan perched on a file case. Promptly at 4:15, the "Star-Spangled Banner" blares from a phonograph and everybody stands at attention or salute. The flag is solemnly lowered by an officer, and the colonel's secretary without pausing in her gum chewing, folds it to her breast.



COL. DORIOT

The colonel thought his force needed something to break the afternoon, and to make them think of their country. Actually—French-born though he is—Doriot provides more American esprit de corps than a dozen flag ceremonies.

All this is encouraging, but the true story must not omit the fact that the Quartermaster Corps is one thing and the Army another. The QMC proposes and the Army disposes. If WPB asks QMC to find a way to save brass in a flexible nozzle for a gasoline can, QMC will find the way. But it does not follow that the brass hat gentry will give up the brass. In fact, this is a case in point. QMC did invent just such a nozzle, but struck a snag. The Army insists on having what it is accustomed to have.

This conservation program rolls into impressive totals. By changing the specifications of field ranges, canteens, meat cans, cups and other items, QMC is saving approximately 50 million pounds of aluminum in a two-year period—enough aluminum to supply 5400 pursuit planes or 1500 four-engine bombers.
